Motorbike taxi driver nabbed for murder

By Sompratch Saowakhon

PATONG: Low-season desperation for passengers took a deadly turn on the night of September 13, when a motorcycle taxi driver gunned down a rival from a competing queue in Patong.

The alleged killer, who turned himself in the following day, was no stranger to being handcuffed: he was out on bail for the May 19 shooting murder of another man inside a 7-Eleven store on nearby Nanai Rd.

Pol Maj Gen Apirak Hongthong, the omnipresent Phuket Provincial Police Commander, made his way to the murder scene after Kathu Police Superintendent Col Grissak Songmoonark informed him of the shooting at 10 pm.

Also at the scene was Kathu Police Investigations Inspector Chalermchai Hertsawas, who identified the victim as 31-year-old Pornchai "Ko-Cherd" Suwannakin.

Mr Pornchai was shot at least four times with a 9mm gun as he stood next to his motorbike in front of Bua Hotel on Phisit Gorani Rd. Two of the bullets entered his skull, killing him instantly. He was also hit twice in the back. Police collected four bullet casings at the scene. His assailant, who was riding a motorcycle, rode off quickly, witnesses said.

Rescue workers from the Kusoldharm Foundation took Mr Pornchai's body, still clad in the motorbike taxi drivers' trademark light-blue vest, to Patong Hospital.

"We know the victim had a problem with a member of a rival motorcycle taxi queue," said Lt Col Chalermchai. "We learned by questioning people in the area that he was a kind fellow, but a

One Two Go Memorial Service

Rabbi Aharon Solomon reads a few verses of the Torah for the Jewish victims who died in the One Two Go crash on September 16 last year. His words were heard by a handful of people who turned up to pay their respects at the informal one-year memorial service held on Mai Khao Beach.

A brief Buddhist ceremony with monks was also held before Phuket resident Christy Sweet read a list of names of those who died in the crash then read a list of names of the survivors.

The service was held on the beach at the western end of the runway at Phuket International Airport, beside the tsunami memorial stone and a spirit house posted in remembrance of Hanna Backlund, the murdered Swedish backpacker.

few days ago he parked to pick up a fare in an area claimed by a rival taxi queue. That's what led to the dispute and subsequent murder."

Questioning the victim's friends from the same queue, police were told that the killer was none other 31-year-old Chainart Yuyen.

Earlier this year, on May 18, Chainart turned himself over to police after an arrest warrant had been issued for him in connection with the murder of motorcycle taxi driver Satien Wongwai, aged 25.

Mr Satien, also described as a friendly man, was shot twice in the back and once in the neck with a 9mm gun inside the 7-Eleven near the intersection of Nanai Rd and Sainamyen Rd at

Coral Reef Squadron project 'ready to go'

By Stephen Fein

PHUKET CITY: Following a productive meeting at Phuket Provincial Hall on the afternoon of September 16, the "Coral Reef Squadron" project to create an artificial reef off Bang Tao Bay is ready to move forward and will kick off with a "Grand Opening" event on November 29, its organizers say.

Rainer Gottwald, who heads the Thai Dive Association (TDA) technical committee, described the recent meeting as "harmonious".

With help from the Royal Thai Navy, the sinking of the vessels will begin in early to mid-November, with a hiatus in the work on November 14-16 during Royal Cremation ceremonies for HRH Princess Galyani Vadhana.

The exact timing of the work will depend on weather conditions, he said.

One of the four Douglas C-47 Dakota Skytrain military transport aircraft used in the project will be specially decorated underwater and serve as a focal point of the opening ceremonies, he added.

Providing some submarine "ground support" for the 10 aircraft will be WWII era GMC trucks, provided courtesy of the Royal Thai Army.

One of the project organizers, For Sea Foundation Secretary Vittayen Muttamara, confirmed that his group will organize a benefit concert on November 28, the day before the "Grand Opening" with top national acts "on the same scale as Tata Young" scheduled to perform.

A major impediment to the about 2 am on May 16.

Chainart, who met Patong Mayor Pian Keesin before handing himself over to police in May, denied any involvement in that murder.

After his relatives posted bail, he returned to work in the same area, which is home to thousands of nightlife industry workers who use motorcycle taxis to get to and from work in the Soi Bangla area.

The same scenario was played out again on September 15, when Chainart, again accompanied by relatives, turned himself over directly to Maj Gen Apirak, Phuket's top cop.

Lt Col Chalermchai declined to say exactly where or when the handover took place, but said that the suspect had confessed to involvement in both cases and has been charged with a second case of premeditated murder.

"He is still in a cell at Kathu Police Station. We are preparing his case file and will turn him over to the Phuket Provincial Court soon," he said.

"We will not allow his release on bail under any circumstances," he said.

project was cleared on September 10, when Chuchard Santikanant, Managing Director of Cargo Marketing International Co Ltd (CMI), confirmed that he had finally received payment of 2.4 million baht for disassembly and transport of the aircraft from an airforce base in Lopburi to their current location at Phuket Deep Sea Port.

Heartbroken man suicides by drinking pesticide

By Sompratch Saowakhon

PHUKET CITY: In what appears to be yet another case of suicide, the decomposing corpse of a Thai-American man was found on September 14 in a small apartment on Phang Nga Rd, where he took his own life by drinking insecticide.

Phuket City Police Investigations Inspector Pitakpol Sompong identified the deceased as 60-year-old Narong Yingyongrattana, who was born in Thailand but held a US passport after having lived and worked in the US for many years.

At about 2 pm, the owner of Nanachart Mansion on Phang Nga Rd Soi 2 called the 191 emergency number to report a death in Room 211, on the second floor of the four-story apartment block.

Police and rescue workers from the Kusoldharm Foundation had to remove a window pane to gain entry into the room, which was locked from the inside.

Once inside, they found Mr Narong's corpse lying face up on the bed, next to which were found a bottle of insecticide and a small bottle of SangSom whiskey.

The apartment's owner, who identified herself as a close friend of the deceased, said Mr Narong had been living in the room free-of-charge since August 20.

From the state of decomposition, Lt Col Pitakpol estimated that Mr Narong died no fewer than three days before his body was discovered.

"I found a suicide note in which Mr Narong apologized to his close friends, but said he could no longer endure the heartbreak he had felt after being jilted by his lover," he said.

The apartment owner told police that she felt sorry for Mr Narong after he was left heartbroken and penniless and let him stay free of charge, encouraging him to try and save up enough money so he could return to America.

But Mr Narong never recovered from the heartbreak and remained despondent, she was quoted as saying.

Mr Narong's body was taken to Vachira Phuket Hospital pending identification by his relatives in Thailand, who have already been contacted.

It would be up to the relatives to request a complete autopsy confirming the cause of death, he said.

However, there were no signs of injury or foul play to suggest that Mr Narong's death was anything other than a suicide, Lt Col Pitakpol said.

Weerasak visits in bid to restore tourist confidence

By Sompratch Saowakhon

PHUKET: Tourism and Sports Minister Weerasak Kowsurat arrived in Phuket on September 10 with New Zealand Ambassador to Thailand Brook Barrington and an entourage of foreign media in a bid to restore tourist confidence in Phuket after a People's Alliance for Democracy (PAD) protest forced the closure of Phuket International Airport (PIA).

Mr Weerasak's visit followed his call for Samak Sundaravej to rescind the state of emergency in Bangkok, which was lifted three days later.

"I have set up many teams of officers Tourism Authority of Thailand [TAT] to help support TAT offices abroad, where we need to make it clear what the current situation in Thailand really is. We need to boost tourist confidence so they will return.

Tourism and Sports Minister Weerasak Kowsurat (center, purple shirt) tours the airport grounds with (from left) former Phuket Chamber of Commerce President Pamuke Achariyachai, Phuket Governor Niran Kalayanamit, PIA Director Wicha Nernlop and Phuket Senator Thanyarat Achariyachai, who chairs the Senate Standing Committee on Tourism.

This is especially true for Phuket," Mr Weerasak said.

"I don't want to have to explain to those countries why we still have a state of emergency declared," he added.

Mr Weerasak advised senior government officers, including Governor Niran Kalayanamit and PIA Director Wicha Nernlop, to put recent events behind them and focus on the future.

"I don't want everyone to keep worrying about this. I need you to cheer up quickly and learn from this experience so you will be better prepared in the future," he said.

"Here in Thailand we know that the state of emergency applies only to Bangkok, but other countries don't know that. They think it applies throughout the country and they don't know that Phuket is a long way from Bangkok," he said.

Patong steps up surf safety

PATONG: Strong waves creating dangerous swimming conditions in Patong has prompted officers from Patong Municipality to volunteer to keep watch along Patong Beach for any tourists who may get into difficulty.

Patong Deputy Mayor Chairat Sukban told the Gazette, "Our officers have volunteered to stand by on the beach to look out for tourists. Sailors from the Third Naval Area Command and police officers are also helping out."

He urged all tourists to heed red "no swimming" flags posted on the beach.

"We need all tourists to please check for red warning flags before they go swimming. Even though the heavy rains have stopped, the wind and the waves are still strong," he added.

The move followed a warning issued on September 12 by the Meteorological Department (MET) urging all ships in the area to proceed with caution.

The MET also warned that Phuket and the other five Andaman Coast provinces were at risk of heavy rains and flooding, and advised all people in areas at high-risk of flash-flooding to remain alert and be prepared to evacuate quickly if necessary.

Chalong Circle finally removed

By Sompratch Saowakhon

CHALONG: Instead of removing and preserving the fountain that has been the centerpiece of Chalong Circle for years, workers on September 11 demolished the landmark that local residents had affectionately nicknamed "the birdbath".

The decision followed years of complaints of traffic jams at the critical southern junction.

However, progress on the decision whether or not to remove the roundabout stalled, as it required input from at least five government agencies.

Tired of waiting for the project to move ahead, Phuket Vice-Governor Worapoj Rattasima on September 1 ordered Phuket Highways Office chief Saroj Suwinchai to speed up the project.

The heads of the government agencies involved met on September 8, with demolition work starting three days later.

The entire project will cost no more than 300,000 baht, Mr Saroj told the Gazette.

Traffic lights have been installed on all the major roads entering the junction: Patak Rd,

A worker starts removing the rubble that once was the landmark fountain on Chalong Circle, nicknamed by locals as 'the birdbath'.

Chao Fa East Rd, Chao Fa West Rd and Wiset Rd.

"Vehicles entering the junction from Chalong Pier will be forced to turn left onto Wiset Rd. They must do a U-turn and come back and wait at the lights to enter the junction again," Mr Saroj had earlier explained to the Gazette.

The removal of Chalong Circle has been the source of much debate among foreigners living in the south of the island.

Many foreigners have written to the Gazette over the years complaining that traffic tailbacks formed at Chalong Circle only when police or traffic lights regulated traffic flow through the junction.

Changing the traffic flow at the junction also raises the problem of what to call the intersection, said Mr Saroj, as it had become famous as Ha Yaek Chalong, literally meaning "Chalong five-way junction."

It will now become a "four-way" intersection, he said.

Apirak takes over investigation into attack on Aussie

By Sompratch Saowakhon

PHUKET CITY: Phuket Provincial Police Commander Apirak Hongthong has stepped in to personally oversee the investigation into the brutal stabbing attack of an Australian expat and his Thai girlfriend in their home in Rawai before dawn on September 10.

Maj Gen Apirak on September 13 told the Gazette that he was so unhappy with the Chalong Police investigation that he led a special investigation unit to the scene of the crime to monitor the area, questioning suspicious characters and gathering other information at 4 am, about the same time the attack took place.

Gen Apirak's team left the scene at about 10 am and began sharing information they had gathered with the Chalong investigation team led by Maj Jaran Bangprasert, he added.

The victims will be questioned again and all available information will be cross-checked against the descriptions and profiles of all known criminals in area, he said.

"This is a very sensitive case that could affect tourist confidence, so we must do our very best to bring the perpetrator to justice," he said.

Gen Apirak admitted he was angry about the lack of updates about the investigation by Chalong Police.

"I am not very happy with them now, but we will do our best to arrest the suspects. I am going to personally lead this investigation so take my word for it that the perpetrator will be arrested," he added.

While recovering from surgery at Bangkok Hospital Phuket, the Swiss-born Australian, a retired teacher who asked that his name and address not be published, told the Gazette, "Somebody broke into the house - I don't know how they got into the house - on Wednesday, between three and four in the morning,

"We have two bedrooms. My girlfriend went to bed early and slept in one bedroom. Then I woke up and I could hear shouting. I thought the television was on, but I couldn't see any flickering.

"So I went out and I could see that the door was closed to the second bedroom. So I opened it and there was a man in a mask fighting with my girlfriend. So I jumped in, and that's how it all got started. She got stabbed and I got stabbed."

The Aussie was slashed four times and stabbed once in the stomach.

His girlfriend, who owns the home they share, was stabbed in the back of the head, punched repeatedly and slashed in one of her hands.

A second man spotted outside the home may have been serving as a "lookout" for the burglar, he said.

From her hospital bed, the 35-year-old girlfriend told the Gazette, "We never close the doors when we sleep, so the sound of the door closing woke me. When I tried to scream, the attacker put his hand over my mouth and held a box-cutter to my throat and punched me in the stomach," she said.

The knife cut her neck open, but no major arteries were severed and she is recovering well, though she is still in a great deal of pain in the neck and stomach, she said the following day.

"This is the first time anything like this has happened at my home and we have never had any conflicts with anyone before," she added.

Man found hanged while in police custody

KATHU: Anurak Prohmwiharn, 26, was found hanged in a cell at Tung Tong Police Station on September 13, while he was being held for robbing a German neighbor.

Tung Tong Police Superintendent Arayapan Pukbuakhao said Mr Anurak's death was reported at about 2:30 am by Sgt Maj Peeraphon Junmee, the officer in charge of the cell at the time.

Mr Anurak was found hanging by a meter-long garment that he usually wore wrapped around his midsection, under his clothing. It was not visible to officers when he was placed in the cell the day before, Col Arayapan explained.

After stealing the wallet of a German neighbor, Mr Anurak climbed onto the roof of his home in Soi Namtok and refused to come down. His brother Channarong, 31, made the call to police that led to his arrest, he explained.

Col Arayapan attributed Mr Anurak's apparent suicide on his unstable mental condition, the result of a long-term addiction to inhalants.

He had recently escaped from a drug rehabilitation center, Col Arayapan added.

Mr Anurak's family were initially suspicious of the circumstances behind his death, but they later accepted that Mr Anurak had taken his own life after an autopsy and investigation into his death by high-level local government officers.

The family does not plan to press charges, said Col Arayapan.

KOH YAO NOI HOMESTAY

Preserving the past for a brighter future

Millions of tourists come to Phuket every year. Hundreds of thousands of them spend much of their time being herded around the island on big tour buses to one souvenir shop after another until they are ready to be fed. Then, they're taken to a restaurant serving dishes just like they'd eat at home.

Others forgo the bus rides to souvenir shops for simply relaxing and playing on the beach and perhaps taking a speedboat trip to one of the nearby islands made famous in a movie.

Most of those tourists go home with souvenirs, suntans and a collection of photographs to show their friends, but very few of them will be able to say much about how they "made friends with the locals" or "sampled local delicacies".

However, tourists who try out one of the region's homestay holidays can boast that they experienced the real Thailand and its traditional ways of life.

The Community Based Eco-Tourism Club on Koh Yao Noi is partly run by the Phuket Tourism and Sports office. It is also operated by the locals who act as homestay host families and those who take visitors on trips to experience the area's natural beauty and traditional farming and fishing techniques.

Koh Yao Noi is in Phang Nga Bay and the island is being showcased around the region as a successful homestay model where tourists and the community learn to live together.

Director of Phuket Tourism and Sports office Promchote Traivate said that as well as being a boon to the islanders, the program is also a way of preserving traditional life.

"Visitors can get hands-on experience by joining our eco-tourism project. They learn how to do things the way the locals do, such as plowing with buffalo, planting rice, but it is important to preserve the traditional way of life for the sake of the locals themselves, who are dangerously close to losing touch with traditions they have lived by for thousands of years," said Mr Promchote.

"The aim of this group is to encourage the community to become involved in tourism but in a way that is eco-friendly by preserving the environment," he added.

Mr Promchote explained

As the package-tour industry continues to grow in Phuket and beyond, taking with it the natural resources and natural beauty that attracted visitors in the first place, one small local community on Koh Yao Noi is betting its future on a more sustainable and eco-friendly approach. Nick Davies, with plow in hand, takes a closer look at the island's award-winning agro-tourism project.

that there are now hundreds of buffalo on the island, but only one of them knows how to plow a field and there are only a few people on the island who know how to teach it.

"The Koh Yao Noi eco-tourism community is a role model for community-based tourism. The aim is to introduce the lifestyle of the islanders – who are traditionally fishermen – to tourists and raise awareness of problems faced by them as an alternative to conventional tourist attractions. It is also an additional and sustainable source of revenue for locals," said Mr Promchote.

Tourists can either make their own way to the island for a day trip or they can join one of the two- or three-day homestay packages available.

A regular ferry service operates about 12 outbound trips a day to Koh Yao Noi from 7:30 am to 5 pm from Bang Rong Pier on Phuket's east coast.

From Koh Yao Noi's pier, a songteaw bus runs to the first stop a few kilometers down the road, the island's Tourist Service Center, which is a wooden structure with a concrete floor and an iron and straw roof. The center was established with the help of a 300,000-baht donation from Rotary International.

This is the HQ of the Koh Yao Noi Community Based Eco-Tourism Club, which has been given the World Legacy Award by Conservation International and National Geographic Traveler for its homestay project.

The project also received the Award for Outstanding Performance from the Tourism Authority of Thailand in 2007, and the Ministry of Sport and Tourism has Certified Koh Yao Yai's community as Home Stay Standard Thailand (2007-2009).

Our visit to Koh Yao Noi was a day trip so we had to squeeze in quite a few activities in a short space of time.

Our next stop was a tiered rice paddy nestled at the base of a hill. It was a scene that Claude Monet would have turned into a masterpiece.

Crouched in the lush carpet of young rice stalks were women dressed in colorful sarongs, scarves and straw hats. They were bent to task against the hilly backdrop, some pulling out half-grown rice to be transplanted, others planting rice in neat rows giving them space to grow.

Off came our shoes, and we rolled up our sleeves as our hosts encouraged us to join them in two feet of muddy water to try planting the rice for ourselves. After a while, what were once nice straight lines of rice plant had become wonky first-time attempts at self sufficiency. I was worried we might have dramatically reduced their crop for the season but it was smiles all round from our hosts.

Our work had made us hungry and we were bundled into the songteaw to be taken to lunch. We pulled into an area dotted with four beautifully-made guest bungalows that looked like log cabins. They wouldn't have looked out of place covered in snow and nestled in the Alps. We were going for lunch with our hosts in the Eco Tourism Group Meeting Place – a house on stilts that juts out toward the sea.

We took off our shoes and walked across the wooden floorboards to the dining area that has a spectacular view across the water to Koh Yao Yai.

On the table was an array of traditional dishes such as curries, fried vegetables and, of course, a lot of fresh seafood, including colorful crabs, which our hosts had to show us the best way to shell. The meal was a fun and casual affair, made all the more relaxing with the magnificent view. The seafood was some of the freshest we'd ever tasted and our hosts made sure we were satiated.

Below us, hundreds of crabs with oversized claws went about their business of chasing each other out of holes in the sand, while long-legged birds hopped from place to place picking off the smaller shore-side creatures.

This place also has two spotless guest bedrooms, simply decorated but cozy looking with a bed, wardrobe, a TV and drawers. The window provides a view along the coastline with long-tail boats resting on the sand.

Our next stop was a secluded house on stilts a short way inland. We had to travel down a narrow dirt track to get to the local dwelling.

Sitting under the shade of a large 100-year-old tree were a group of smiling faces belonging to several generations, from a mother and baby and shy-but-curious kids to the grandparents who showed us some of the ways they harvest and prepare food.

They demonstrated and let us try some of their skills in finding and making food. We tried casting fishing nets in a perfect circle and pounded the husks from rice before cleaning the grain of chaff by throwing it in the air from a woven grass tray, which brought the chickens running over to peck around our feet.

We were also shown an ingenious mouse trap that relied on a heavy block of wood and a twig trigger to drop the block onto the unsuspecting prey.

We had all developed a thirst but there was more work to do before we could take a drink, which was to be fresh coconut juice taken from coconuts that we were shown how to properly cut open.

Our final adventure for the day was to introduce ourselves to the only buffalo on the island that knows how to draw a plow. He allowed us to climb up on him and graciously posed for pictures with everyone.

Next, I found myself up to my knees in mud as I gripped the plow handle while the buffalo pulled me round the field. It wasn't as difficult as I had imagined and I had visions of living the rest of my days as a content farmer in sunny fields.

Mr Promchote explained

that a few years ago, the island had very few buffalo, even though it once had many.

"As farming technologies arrived, people stopped using buffaloes to help with their farming. Subsequently, the number of buffaloes on the island declined, as did the number of people who knew how to farm with them," he said.

"Now there are several hundred buffalo on Koh Yao Noi following an intensive program to re-introduce them here, but as well as teaching the buffaloes how to plow a field, we have also had to teach the farmers how to work with them again," he added.

There are a few rules that homestay guests need to follow to fit in with the community. They are to dress modestly, not to consume drugs or alcohol, not to leave any litter and not to take any shells or coral.

The community is responsible for developing the tour programs, along with the regulations, activities, and prices for them and there are several two- and three-day programs available through the Community Based Eco-Tourism project.

Depending on the number of days, trips can include activities such as exploring the island's seven traditional villages, learning how to make batik, visiting a coconut-shell souvenir workshop, helping farmers and fishermen and testing your bargaining skills at the local market.

Trips to nearby islands with diverse eco-systems are also available. Depending on the lunar cycle and tidal patterns, some programs may include collecting wing shells and a trip to see Thailand's only blue coral site.

In keeping with the ecological theme, there are several activities that require only human power, such as sea canoe tours, trekking, or simply rent a bicycle and tour the island by yourself for about 200 baht a day.

Queer News

Sorry mate, but can I have your wife?

LOEI: A long friendship ended in tragedy on the night of August 30, when a man visiting his buddy's house without warning asked if he could have his friend's wife.

At 7 am on August 31, Pak Chom Police duty officer Thongphum Premloao received a call from a villager, who reported a dead body hidden in a banana plantation near Ban Na Khor Village 12, in Pak Chom District.

The body was identified as that of Suphachai Phawan, 56. He had been slashed in the face and beaten with a blunt instrument.

Questioning Suphachai's neighbors, police pieced together the details of how the victim met his fate.

Neighbors said that at about 7 pm the night before, Suphachai's friend Jaroen Janngam, 43, came to the victim's house.

This, however, was no ordinary social call; Jaroen had a somewhat bold request to make of his buddy.

Not one to beat around the bush, Jaroen asked Suphachai if he could take his wife, Wilai, 40, to live with him; this despite the fact that Jaroen already had his own wife and children to love and look after.

At the time, Wilai was in Udon Thani, where she was reportedly being cured of some black magic spells she believed Jaroen had placed upon her.

Unsurprisingly, Suphachai did not react well to the request. A scuffle broke out and Jaroen, perhaps having prepared for the worst, pulled out a knife and slashed his friend across the face. While Suphachai was reeling in pain, Jaroen grabbed a length of tamarind wood and beat his friend to death, police said.

Jaroen dragged the body to the banana plantation to hide it, then went back to get Suphachai's motorbike, which he torched at a corn silo. After returning home, Jaroen drank a large amount of pesticide in an apparent attempt to kill himself.

He was not successful, however. Friends took him to Pak Chom Hospital, where police later caught up with him and arrested him for Suphachai's murder.

STAMPS

Thai Post marks the passing of the telegram

To celebrate Thailand's National Communications Day on August 4, Thailand Post released a stamp commemorating Thailand's now-defunct telegram service, which came to an end on June 30 this year after 133 years of service.

Thailand's telegram service was established in 1875 by Rama V King Chulalongkorn, who founded the Telegram Department at the same time as the Post Department. His brother, HRH Prince Panurangsi Swangwong, was the first director general of both departments.

The first Thailand Telegram office was located near the Ministry of Defense and the Saranrom Royal Palace in Bangkok.

Thailand's first telegram was sent from Bangkok to neighboring Samut Prakan. In 1878, a line was installed from Bangkok to the Royal Palace at Bang Pa-in, which was later extended to nearby Ayudhaya's Muang District.

At first, telegram lines were used for government business only; the device used to transmit the telegrams was a Morse code machine.

The demand for telegrams quickly increased as it was often the fastest way to communicate.

The Morse code system used initially included only Roman symbols, although the Thai alphabet was eventually incorporated.

Thailand's telegram business grew and experienced something of a boom period, but over the years new communication technologies led to its obsolescence.

The stamp to commemorate Thailand's telegram service, measuring 27 by 45 millimeters, shows an image of a Morse code machine with workers above it busily transmitting and receiving messages.

On sale for 3 baht, the stamp was designed by Tanes Polchaiyawong, who used a multicolor lithography technique.

Thai British Security Printing Pcl printed only one million copies the special edition stamp now available at all 10 of Phuket's post offices.

Top technician to lead Middle Way

PHUKET CITY: The next Middle Way meditation session will be at the Phuket Meditation Center (formerly Wang Kung Restaurant), next to Suan Luang Park, on September 21, starting at 1:30 pm.

Fluent in English, Phra Thada graduated with honors with a bachelors' degree industrial electrical technology from King Mongkut Institute of Technology, Thailand's top engineering school.

Phra Thada is particularly gifted at explaining basic Buddhist tenets using examples from science.

He had a couple of jobs after his graduation, the last of which was with a global technology company based in Tokyo, Japan. After 20 years of interest in Buddhism, he finally fulfilled his dream of entering the monkhood in April 2004.

The Middle Way sessions are free and open to all, though donations to cover expenses are welcome.

The language of instruction is English.

To get to Phuket Meditation Center from Central Festival Phuket, head south on the bypass road and turn left onto Wirat Hongyok Rd at the first set of traffic lights, at the sign to Wat Naka. The country is suffering from widespread drug abuse and a rising number of young male prostitutes, some as young as age 13, the Office of the National Economic and Social Development Board (NESDB) has revealed.

The claims were reported in the agency's second quarterly report, for which a focus group was monitored from April to June on five indicators: quality of human resources, health and social security, behavior and well-being of citizens, the sexual behavior of young people and the environment.

The report showed that over the past decade the number of people aged between 15 and 24 suffering from sexually transmitted diseases continued to rise.

In terms of social security, people's lives and property were more secure, though drug abuse was becoming a severe problem. Even prison inmates had easy access to narcotics, NESDB Deputy Secretary-General Kittisak Sinthuanich commented.

Injuries and deaths caused by road accidents had reduced due to the strict enforcement of traffic laws, but people continued to break speed limits, the report found.

With regards to social behavior and well-being, the report showed that households were spending less on alcohol, but more on cigarettes. However, alcoholism and consumption of cigarettes among young people was still on the rise.

In addition, more and more teenagers were living together outside marriage.

The report also found that there are 48,000 people working in the sex industry, including students, of which 44.4% were aged between 13 and 16.

About 60% of the sex workers earned about 20,000 baht a month or more.

With regards to the environment, the report said the quality of air in many areas had improved but people in Bangkok, Saraburi and Chiang Mai were still breathing high levels of particulates.

In addition, some areas in Bangkok had high levels of ozone gas, while almost every area in the capital was affected by noise pollution, the report said.

World heritage fever. The Bangkok Metropolitan Administration is planning to seek World Heritage status for the capital's riverside area.

BMA city planning department head Anchalee Pattamasawan said the area alongside the Chao Phya River has great historical and cultural value as the cradle of Rattanakosin-era culture, which began with the establishment of Bangkok as capital in 1782.

Her department is preparing documents for the World Heritage site application and will renovate valuable sites in the area and draw up a management plan, she said.

After a detailed plan is prepared, the BMA will contact the Fine Arts Department and the department will also ask authorities to help improve water quality in the Chao Phya River, she said.

Boost or bust? Drinking so-called "health beverages" with dietary supplements to boost body and brain function does not achieve benefits claimed in advertisements, nutritionist Prapaisri Sirichakwal of Mahidol University has warned.

There is no scientific proof to support claims that drinks containing collagen, peptide and L-carnitine provide health benefits, she said.

Advertisements mislead people into believing products containing so-called "boosters" provide health benefits.

The acid in the stomach will break these supplements down before they can be absorbed, she noted.

Food and Drug Administration Deputy Secretary-General

Manit Arunakul said claims made without scientific support violate the 1979 Food Act.

Buddha ban. The Culture Ministry has banned the use of three Buddhist icons for commercial purposes, its permanent secretary Vira Rojpojchanarat has announced.

The protected icons comprise Buddha statues, Wheel of Doctrine insignia (also known as Wheel of Life) and images of monks.

The three religious icons could not be used to represent a trademark or be a part of business promotion, as has become popular in the West, he said.

Slow justice. The Appeals Court on September 9 handed down a three-year jail term for former Agriculture Ministry deputy permanent secretary Pramote Rak-sarat for corruption and abuse of authority.

In its ruling, the court said Mr Pramote, now 64, committed the offenses in 1996, when as head of the Agricultural Extension Department's horticultural-crop promotion division he proposed the construction of a 49.2-million-baht plant nursery in Trang.

In 2002, the National Counter Corruption Commission pronounced Pramote guilty, but in 2004 a lower court acquitted him. The public prosecutors appealed.

Samui rallies to help burn victim

A fundraising event was held on September 17 for Khun Daeng, the woman seriously injured in a recent accident that resulted in a local 7-Eleven burning down.

Ms Daeng received serious burns to more than 80% of her body in the fire that resulted from a drunk driver running into an electricity pole that sparked the blaze.

The accident happened at 7:30 am on August 9 when the driver of a pickup truck ran into an electricity pole outside the 7-Eleven store in Ban Rak.

The driver, said to be intoxicated and arguing with his girlfriend at the time of the accident, hit several parked motorbikes but no one else was injured at the time.

Soon after striking the cement pole, the resulting damage caused the pole to collapse onto the truck crushing it and further causing an explosion, witnesses reported.

An inferno broke out in the 7-Eleven and Bangkok Bank, causing smoke to bellow into the air, which could be seen from several areas of the island.

The community rallied to support Ms Daeng by raising funds in establishments all over the island to help pay for her mounting hospital bills.

The event was held at the Samui Bungy Jump from 3 pm until midnight, with live music and DJs for entertainment and a donation box and raffle to raise money for the cause.

For further information about the event or for information on how to make a donation, call Joe at 087-8010470.

Game on. In a recent conference, government and community leaders of Koh Samui gathered in an attempt to find a solution to the growing problems associated with computer gaming on the island.

the conference after receiving several complaints from parents and teachers who claimed that students were spending too much time in computer gaming shops, detracting them from their school work.

Attendees of the conference gave evidence of the detrimental effects that computer games can have on children, adding that many of the games were extremely violent in their content and inappropriate for most young users. Concerns ranged from lack of attention to school work to more serious medical effects, citing the recent death of a Bangkok teenager.

The group looked at possible new regulations that could be introduced to limit the amount of time youths under 18 would be allowed to spend playing games or surfing the Internet in shops.

Police attending the conference proposed that a community law be implemented that would limit the time to two hours, with Internet shops and public gaming facilities being held accountable for ensuring the limit was adhered to.

The new law is to be brought into effect in the near future.

Phuket property seminar. After his success in organizing a property seminar on Koh Samui, Callum Laing, managing director of MobyElite, has announced plans to conduct a similar event in Phuket in December.

The first seminar, held during Koh Samui's International Regatta, played host to more than 100 guests from around the globe who were drawn to the island for the yacht race.

The seminar was sponsored by Raimon Land PLC during the Samui regatta and took place at the Centara Hotel in Chaweng Beach. It was intended to bring together serious members of the development community for an exchange of information in relation to Thailand's property market.

Keynote speakers on the day included Nigel Cornick, CEO of Raimon Land; John Birt, Managing Director of Samui Villas and Homes; and Gary Biesty, partner in Mayer Brown JSM.

This concept will be repeated during the Phuket King's Cup Regatta, which will be held this year from November 29 to December 6.

Organizers for the Phuket seminar will invite two successful firms from the main resort islands around Thailand and Bangkok to join as partners in the event. The invitations are to be extended to investors with a substantial investment in Asian property.

The Phuket seminar is set to kick off with a discussion of Asian property trends followed by an overview on the Phuket property market.

The following topics are also on the agenda for the seminar: architectural trends and development, environmental trends affecting property investment, legal issues with investing in Thailand, fractional ownership, international finance options and commercial property Market in Thailand. The seminar will end with a dedicated time for questions and answers.

Seminar dates and the venue have yet to be confirmed. Email info@mobyelite.com for more details.

Suspected insurgents decapitated the chief administrator of Tambon Sadawa after intercepting him on a back road in Pattani's Yarang District on September 10.

Police said that former police officer Athaphon Konlom, 26, was chased by four gunmen on two motorcycles.

They shot him in his pickup with automatic weapons. The vehicle crashed into a primary school. Police said the four men then beheaded the victim.

Two fake bombs were placed at the scene to divert police and spikes were scattered along the road.

More than 3,300 people have been killed in the deep South since January 2004. But security officials have claimed that the situation has improved and the number of violent incidents and attacks has dropped.

Critics said that conclusion was premature because the insurgents remain active and well-equipped.

In a related development, more than 1,000 police and soldiers swept 13 districts of Narathiwat, where they detained six people.

Meanwhile, in Pattani's Nong Chik district, suspected insurgents exploded a roadside bomb targeting a security detail for local teachers in Tambon Pulo-puyo.

Shrapnel damaged their vehicles, but there were no injuries, police said.

Separately in Yala, speaking to reporters from his hospital bed, Veera Saengchan, an Army Ranger injured in a gunfight with insurgents in Banang Sata, said colleague Rusadee Da-oh was killed in the attack by 10 militants.

The insurgents stole eight automatic files and a large quantity of ammunition after over-running their base camp, he said.

"They were dressed in black and hooded. Each was armed with an AK47, except one who had an M79 grenade launcher. They were communicating in Malay. We injured one. The fighting went on for about one hour before reinforcements arrived," explained fellow Ranger Thongrob Kaeowdara-ouyporn.

Explosive exit. A policeman was shot and injured during a September 12 bank robbery in Namom district, Songkhla, a rural area near Haad Yai. The robber escaped after throwing a grenade at police.

A female cashier at the Namom branch of Bank Thai said that about 3 pm, a man came into the bank carrying a pistol and a hand grenade. He shouted for everyone to stay quiet and not to move before ordering one of the cashiers to give him money.

The cashier handed him a bag containing about 500,000 baht. He then ordered the three bank staff to lock themselves in the bathroom and not try and pursue him, the cashier said.

At that point, patrol police making their normal rounds happened to arrive at the scene. They lacks specialists, especially anesthesiologists and surgeons," he said, adding that the patient's family would be compensated by the Health Ministry.

Lone Ranger. A former Ranger was found in possession of two guns, including an assault rifle, and more than 200,000 baht in cash in a routine search of his car at a checkpoint in Trang on September 11.

Chalermphon Jiulor, 34, from Trang's Huay Yot district, was stopped at a Highway Police checkpoint on Highway 419 in Muang District. Police decided to search his Toyota sedan and discovered a .38 caliber pistol and 71 rounds of ammunition, an M-16 assault rifle with 64 rounds of ammunition, as well as 213,720 baht in cash.

Chalermphon, who until last year was serving as a Ranger, denied that the weapons and the cash belonged to him. He was taken to Muang Trang Police Station to be charged with unlawful possession of firearms. Police said that they are now trying to discover the source and intended destination of the guns and money.

ordered the robber to surrender. When he refused, a gun battle broke out.

The man threw his grenade toward the front of the bank, where it exploded and blew out the front window and damaged adjacent shophouses.

The robber escaped in the ensuing confusion. There were no injuries from the explosion, but Sen Sgt Maj Santi Uthokyotha from Namom Police suffered a minor gunshot wound.

Police are now hunting for the gunman, described by the cashier as a well-built man in his forties wearing shorts and a tartan T-shirt. He had concealed his appearance with a cap and dark glasses.

Dr off the hook. The Court of Appeals on September 11 dismissed a malpractice lawsuit against Dr Suthiporn Kraimak of Nakhon Sri Thammarat's Thung Song Hospital in connection with the death of Somkuan Kaewkongchan during an appendectomy five years ago.

The patient is said to have died from the incorrect dosage of anesthetic, the Public Health Ministry's permanent secretary, Dr Prat Boonyawongsevirot, said.

Thung Song District Criminal Court had issued a guilty verdict on December 6 and sentenced Dr Suthiporn to three years in jail for causing the patient's death. However, the Health Ministry submitted a petition with the appeal court's division 8 to review the sentence.

The petition argued that Dr Suthiporn had been assigned by the Health Ministry to provide care to people in remote areas. According to Medical Council regulations, such physicians had to treat all patients – even if they were not specialists – because of the large amount of sick people.

The court decision to overturn Dr Suthiporn's guilty verdict boosted the morale of medical workers in rural areas, said Dr. Prat.

"If doctors who work in rural hospitals refuse to conduct surgeries because they are not specialists, then it would be dangerous for patients because the country's health care system

Monumental merit-making

By Akbar Khan

In Part I of our series on Phuket's "nine sacred sites" we took a look at Wat Phra Tong, the temple in Thalang with the famous half-Buddha image and cannons in the forecourt.

The wife of the Mayor of Thalang who built the temple was Thao Thepkrasattri, one of Phuket's two legendary heroines whose exploits are enshrined by a monument located in the heart of Phuket.

The life-sized statues of the heroic sisters, Thao Thepkrasattri and her sibling Thao Srisoontorn stand side by side on a decorated marble plinth at Tha Rua.

King Padung of Burma had declared war on Thailand, the Burmese had already ransacked Ayudhya and Bangkok had just replaced Thonburi as the new capital of the kingdom.

The King at the time was Rama I, the first king of the present Rattanakosin dynasty.

Further south, the Burmese had already landed on Phuket and taken the tin mines by force.

The Burmese forces then started to march towards Thalang Town, where the mayor was too old and sick to offer any resistance.

His wife, however, refused to stand by and watch the Burmese capture Thalang.

By disguising hundreds of women in army uniforms and parading them through the town, they tricked the enemy into believing that they were troop reinforcements fresh from Bangkok. This ruse eventually forced the Burmese to withdraw.

The monument was built by locals and unveiled on May 23, 1967. The pair of statues is now the spiritual focal point of an annual fair commemorating the bravery of the two women who were instrumental in the defeat of the Burmese in 1785, which incidentally was the year of the snake.

The monument was designed and built in 1966 under the instructions of Sanan Silakorn, the best student of Sin Pirasee (The Thai name for Corrado Ferruci). Sin Pirasee founded Silpakorn University, which is regarded as the premier arts education institution in country and home to many national artists.

Merit-makers and well-wishers take note: the proper way to lay a garland on the two smaller statues is around the neck, not on the sword.

Sanan built the monument as part of a national development campaign by Field Marshall Pibul Songkram so that all Thai people would be reminded of their ancestors' bravery.

Cast in bronze, the two heroines are wearing jong kraben trousers, which were worn by Thai soldiers during that era. The sleeves of their tops are puffed, making them appear to have large biceps.

The cloth that covers the torso was traditionally worn in different ways.

If you look carefully at the statues, you will see that the piece of cloth was wrapped around the body and tied behind the neck. This method of donning the cloth keeps the breasts firmly in place even during vigorous motion.

Women of that time would wrap the cloth around their torso in different styles, depending on what they were doing. This particular style was used for performing certain types of work – and for going to war.

Also notice that Thao Thepkrasattri's sword is held with her elbow slightly bent, a typical pose of soldiers leaving camp for war.

Before the Burmese invasion, the two heroines were known simply as Jan and Mook. However, after saving Thalang from the Burmese, they both were given new names and titles by royal appointment.

Khunying Jan became Thao Thepkrasattri and Khunying Mook became Thao Srisoontorn. When standing in front of the monument, which faces north towards Burma, the lady to the left is Jan and the lady to the right is Mook.

Every day, people of all walks of life visit the monument. Many of them are tourists, others come to pray and pay their respects to the heroines.

Those looking to win something or overcome an enemy find this sacred site especially attractive, and many drivers will wai in respect – even while negotiating the roundabout which encircles the site.

In front of the main monument is a smaller replica of the statue, which is the place for making wishes. Thais usually light incense sticks and offer a garland of flowers to improve the chances of their prayers being answered.

Although many people hang garlands from the swords, this is inappropriate. In order to show respect to one of the heroines, hang the flowers around her neck.

Note: Information in this article is from a variety of sources, including the Thalang National Museum and the Tourism Authority of Thailand.

The Gazette will be covering the other sacred sites in forthcoming issues. Many tourists like to spend considerable time in the tranquil surroundings of these sites just soaking up the serenity history and culture – rather than trying to race around all nine sites in one day.

Phuket's official "nine sacred sites" are:

- 1) Wat Pra Tong
- 2) Heroines' Monument
- 3) Sarn Jao Seng Tham
- 4) Sarn Jao Bang Nieow/Sarn Jao Giew Tien Keng

Monika Bielka Ves-covi has taken the art of judging wines to new heights with her cellar selection, which goes a bit further than the simple seeing, swirling, sniffing, sipping and savoring. Now there is an additional ayurvedic quality to be considered, and that is the wine's mineral content.

The monthly Wine Club convenes at Into Thai Restaurant at the Evason Resort & Six Senses Spa on Tuesday and Friday evenings, and on September 2 I took wine-lover extraordinaire Marc Mulloy of PGTV along to "compare notes" – à la PJ O'Rourke, or something like that.

On my last trip to Dubai, Emirates Airlines had served me a few glasses of Trimbach Riesling, and I was eager to sample some more wines from Maison Trimbach.

The Pinot Blanc, Trimbach 2004 went down a treat. This wine is well vinified – fruity and very refreshing. Indeed, you could drink it instead of water. It feels as if you are actually drinking from the fountain of youth.

I commented on the wonderful fragrances of grapefruit and apples, Mssr Hubert added that there was also a touch of honeysuckle.

The appetizer on the menu had the intriguing name of Khong Wang Rawai and when it arrived I thought, what a fabulous idea and exclaimed, Mieng Kum, the name by which the dish is more commonly recognized throughout Thailand.

I explained to Mssr Hubert how to try and tailor the flavor by placing in a betel leaf his own choice of the following offerings: ginger (fragrant, sweet and spicy), shallots (aromatic, spicy), dried shrimp (salty, fishy), peanuts (a salty terroir taste), lime (citrus, sour), toasted coconut (sweet, tropical), and of course the optional prik kee noo (literally "mouse dropping chilis") – we both opted out on those but went for the rest. The entire package then gets a little dollop of a sweet and savory sauce before being devoured.

The idea is to make one and eat it, and as you chew try to calculate what to put more or less of in the next package so as to custom create your own favorite flavor.

Evason's version of Mieng Kum was accompanied by a Riesling Reserve Trimbach 2004, a deep golden color with a psychedelic green hue flashing like a strobe as I swirled my glass. I complimented the complexity of the minerality and fruits, which were truly outstanding with the clear yet subtle aromas of peach and citrus.

Having read about terroirists in a previous edition of the Gazette, I thought that I might inquire about the Alsace terroir. Was Mssr Hubert reading my mind? He jumped up from his seat and walked around in front of all the tables to introduce everybody to the selection of wines that we

The Regent of Rieslings

Evason Sommelier Monika and Mssr Hubert, patriarch of Trimbach – a winery producing healthy rieslings since 1626.

were about to taste.

"A good 'terroir', as you call it, is not enough to have marvelous minerality in wines like this. It depends on the grapes, too, and their ability to absorb minerals. Riesling is the white grape that absorbs minerals better than other strains of white grape," he explained.

The second course was Phuket coral trout in ginger. For those who have not tried this fish. I highly recommend you do, it is exceedingly good as is the wine that accompanied it perfectly – Pinot Gris Reserve Trimbach 2004.

In the Pinot Gris plums and pears could be found and on the nose a little smokiness.

Hubert continued to delight everyone with his wines and charming enlightenment. "Pinot Gris originated in Burgundy and came to the Alsace in the middle of the 16th century. Funnily enough, until 120 years ago Burgundy was using Pinot Gris for white wines, but then they switched to using chardonnay. They still have a few rows of Pinot Gris in between the chardonnay," he said.

The Gewurztraminer Reserve 2001 went swimmingly with the duck, as I am sure it would with even spicier and richer dishes as well as strong cheese and light desserts.

The Gewurztraminer undulated between sweet moments to more complex ones, but remained perfectly balanced. I knew that wine of this caliber was hard to find in Thailand and asked Mssr Hubert about his production. He confirmed that at Trimbach each wine was made using only one variety of grape and no additional sugar is ever added.

The wines are grown organically and no chemical pesticides are used whatsoever.

Now it was time for the beef braised in aromatic Chinese spices, which was accompanied by the final riesling, Cuvee Frederic Emile, Trimbach 2003, one of the estate's two flagship Grand Cru rieslings.

Mssr Hubert explained, "The last riesling, with aroma of pineapple and mango, really shows why the terroir is so important with its minerality and complexity. 2003 was a good year with a hot summer that make this vintage quite exceptional.

"The Cuvee Frederic Emile comes from two contiguous Grand Crus: the limestone rich Geisberg and the steep lower slopes of the Osterberg vineyard. It is a classically racy, snappy riesling that starts off life very tight and austere, and takes years to unveil itself from behind its girdle of acidity. "As the wine matures, the richness and power of this wine becomes readily apparent. It is clearly one of Alsace's greatest rieslings, and really quite underappreciated amongst the world's wine lovers."

Absolutely. I had thought the best rieslings must be German. Now I realize that the best rieslings come from France, or to be more precise from Maison Trimbach. I now know there are white wines for every occasion and dish. The beef was wonderful with the Gewurztraminer, which would pair well with any Thai food.

The night as far as the wine dinner was over, but I felt far from drunk or tired; all those rare trace elements were starting to put ink in my pen.

Fighting for

Stephen Fein: Where did the nickname "Magical" come from?

Ray Elbe: I got the nickname when I first started ring-fighting. I was a grappling specialist, which is when the fight goes to the ground.

For the general audience that sometimes doesn't really understand what is going on, they think the guy on top is always winning the fight. The guy on top would land several huge punches and the crowd would be cheering, but then I'd get a submission.

So "like magic the fight is over" the promoters would say over the microphone, often after a few drinks. Anyway, they started putting the nickname on the DVDs and it stuck – and it's been that ever since.

SF: How long ago did you start fighting competitively?

Ray: I started fighting in November 2002, after training five or six months before that. I started fighting pretty much right away.

SF: So you started in jujitsu?

Ray: Actually, when I first started I was in a sort vale tudo [Portuguese for "anything goes"] style gym, then I progressed into finding a Brazilian jujitsu instructor and started refining my technique.

The UFC started out in 1993, so it was really new. When it started, it was pretty much anything goes, and it was marketed that way.

It was really "style versus style" back then. Then it was taken off the air; it was banned. In order for the sport to grow, they came back with new regulations. They came back with weight classes, mandatory rules, more restrictions – and now you have the UFC you see today. It is definitely more sport, less spectacle now.

SF: How would you describe the key techniques of a top MMA fighter these days?

Ray: Well, there are elements of all five Olympic martial arts, but nowadays Muay Thai, Brazilian jujitsu and Greco-Roman wrestling are the main staples of MMA.

SF: So the key is to master and use elements of each discipline?

Ray: Kind of. The key is to

Ray Elbe is a 25-year-old mixed martial arts (MMA) fighter from Phoenix who is now training in Muay Thai at Tiger Muay Thai camp in Chalong, where he also teaches grappling and other MMA techniques to others.

With three successful Muay Thai fights under his belt, "Magical" Ray now hopes his growing Muay Thai skills will help him fulfill his dream of a successful career in the US-based UFC. To get a UFC contract, he first needs to put together an impressive win streak that will enlarge his fan base and raise his stock with the UFC organizers – much like a music band trying to land a record contract.

Gazette News Editor Stephen Fein talks to Ray about his past, present and plans for the future.

pick the fighter and use the best elements for that fighter. One of my Thai guys is transitioning into MMA. I am not going to teach him how to get someone in a choke hold. I am going to teach him how to defend the choke hold, how to get back up to his feet and how to use his strengths, instead of fighting how his opponent wants to fight.

It is important to cross-train and understand all the elements of the game, but it's really pick and choose. Some guys are stand-up fighters. They want to keep the fight standing, so they learn how to not be taken down by a wrestler and how not to be submitted by a jujitsu-judo guy. They need to learn how to get the fight back up to the feet.

Whereas a guy like me, a jujitsu guy, I'll take the opportunity to learn Muay Thai – the clenches, the elbows, the knees – but inevitably I am looking for an opportunity to take my opponent down. So it's really strategic.

SF: What were you like as a kid?

Ray: A typical kid. I played sports at school; basketball. I didn't do any wrestling, though. I really only got into this while I was in college. Growing up I got pretty decent grades, didn't get into a lot of fights.

When I got into college, I met another kid who was into fighting, so I started training with him and really grew to like it – and started making money at it and made it a profession at that time.

SF: You majored in education.

Has that helped you with training?

Ray: Definitely. It has taught me to appreciate that there are a lot of different kinds of learners. You can learn by different methods: visually, audibly, kinesthetically. In martial arts, people have to see numerous different types of variations and examples.

My having a university degree in teaching gives me an opportunity to see and understand these many different aspects. Plus I feel I am really able to dissect the teaching. Most of my students keep journals of the techniques. We do video reviews of fights and map out six- and seven-week training regimens, with dates and times.

SF: Why are you focused on the UFC. There are a lot of other organizations doing MMA, aren't there?

Ray: Some people say that the UFC is like the NFL of MMA, if you know what I mean. Even better than that, I would say that UFC is "Kleenex" whereas MMA is "tissue".

SF: So how long have you been training in Phuket?

Ray: I travel off and on, but I have been here about two years now. I try to compete around the regions.

SF: How many students do you have?

Ray: It varies, but my morning beginner classes are usually about 15 to 25 people. The competition workout team is anywhere from six to eight.

SF: Tell me about your family.

Ray: My mom has remarried. I am an only child. I have a boring family history as far as that goes. Most of my family lives in the US.

SF: What do they think of you doing MMA – after going to university?

Ray: I got into it when the sport really was still in its "spectacle stage", when there weren't a lot of rules or sanctioning bodies. It was during that time that John McCain, as the senator from Arizona, was trying to take UFC off television.

'Magical' Ray Elbe delivers a knockout kick to an opponent at Patong Boxing Stadium in April this year.

My mom has worked 25 years at the Glendale Police Department in Phoenix, and she is from a real traditional, conservative background. At first she didn't really understand what kind of competition it was. She kind of saw it more as a bar room fight. So she came to a couple of events and saw it wasn't the spectacle it was made out to be on TV.

Over time, I continued competing and she started seeing me on local TV, radio and in magazines. She was able to see rather quickly that I was given a talent that was going to take me beyond just the local scene. At that point, the whole family really started supporting me and wanting me to pursue fighting.

Obviously, it was important that I had a backup plan in case the inevitable injury occurs or things didn't go my way. That's why I stuck with the college degree, even though when I was in college I was making enough money to fight as a full-time occupation.

But it was a deal with my parents: they said, 'Okay, you can do this as long as you continue with your school. When you finish school, if you still want to do this we will support you' – and that's what happened.

SF: Have you had any serious injuries?

Ray: Well, I broke my left leg and I have just came off 10 weeks with a small fracture in my wrist. I chipped my tooth. I cracked my orbital [eye socket]. There are quite a few injuries, but I think that goes with being a professional athlete, training six to eight hours a day and dieting. Injuries are inevitable when you push your body to the limit. I mean, Lance Armstrong rides a bike for a living and he's probably injured more than I am.

SF: So how many Muay Thai fights have you had?

Ray: Three so far. Hopefully, I will be fighting on September 22 at Patong Boxing Stadium [opponent not confirmed as this went to print – Ed]. I think if I am able to continue fighting Muay Thai, one of the things I don't want to do – and it seems like it happens with a lot of foreigners – is that they get four or five wins on the small local tuk-tuk scene and then 'Bam!' they get jumped up right away.

Since I am going to be here a while, I am going to try and pace my career and I would like to see what kind of Muay Thai fighting I can do at international level. That is one of my short-term goals. So some of these fights here are just to get ring experience in Muay Thai.

SF: How much training are you doing now?

Ray: I would say I do about an hour-and-a-half of technique and padwork a day. On top of my regular conditioning and jujitsu training, my wrestling training and my weight training. I work about an-hour-and-a-half on my stand-up Muay Thai with trainers Rittadate and Beneung, who is ranked number 10 in the entire county, number 8 at Lumpini.

SF: So how lucrative can a career in the UFC be?

Ray: Well, the top fighters can make millions – even more than some top boxers.

The UFC doesn't necessarily pay the best. Some of the others might pay you more, because they need you more. But MMA is getting bigger, with a lot of different brands fighting for notoriety. CBC, Fox News and ESPN are now all covering different MMA events.

SF: So do you have any MMA fights planned?

Ray: On November 5, I might have a rematch against the guy I knocked out in Russia. Or we might bring in Canadian Vaughn Anderson from China. I'll be in the States for a while. There is a show in Vegas in February. It's a small show, but it would be a good chance for exposure.

Tiger Muay Thai is also thinking about flying in fighters and doing a mixed MMA card at Patong Boxing Stadium to showcase all the MMA talent we have here.

SF: Are you married? Any girlfriends? Playing the field in Patong?

Ray: No, let's just say I am enjoying living in Southeast Asia. I am taking the opportunity to experience the Thai culture and just kind of expand my horizons before settling down.

SF: And where do you think that will be?

Ray: It will be in the US. I will be in Phuket for quite a while, but my family is in the States. I plan to run a Tiger Muay Thai facility in the US that Will Mac-Namara plans to build there. The plan is that I will be the General Manager. We will take the world champion trainers we have to the US and showcase Muay Thai.

I see this as an opportunity. I feel that when I return to the States I will be competing at UFC level, but I also think authentic Muay Thai training is lacking in Ultimate fighting.

There are a few Muay Thai gyms stateside, but the number of Thais in the US teaching their national sport is lop-sided. The number is much smaller than the number of Brazilians teaching jujitsu. So I want to help pioneer Muay Thai in the States, the same way I am pioneering jujitsu here.

In The Stars

by Isla Star

VIRGO (August 23-September 23): If you're celebrating a birthday this week, you will be able to exploit your creative talents more in the year ahead. The stars suggest that collaboration with another earth sign shows should lead to better success than working with another type of sign. This week, the emphasis should lie on resolving a financial problem and Thursday is the best day for taking action. Wear a piece of dark jade to encourage a more practical outlook.

LIBRA (September 24-October 23): You could learn something to your advantage this weekend. Recent failures in business should soon be a thing of the past, but you will need to act quickly in order to reap profits by the end of the year. If you're single, romance takes you by surprise when Leo looks your way. Boost your flagging energy levels by eating orange colored fruits and being more selective when accepting social invitations.

SCORPIO (October 24-November 22): An emotional reaction to mildly negative news could set you back this weekend. Try to see the situation in proper perspective and you may even find a positive side. A financial windfall is forecast before the end of this month, which could start you thinking about winter travel plans. An Arian friend would love to be invited to join you.

SAGITTARIUS (November 23-December 21): Delays related to housing are likely to cramp your style this week. It may be difficult to discover the real reason for this, but you are advised to dig deeply. Failure to do so could result in further disappointment. Capricorn has some surprising news regarding your romantic aspirations and a hot date is forecast to cheer you up this weekend. Wear turquoise to encourage ideas to flow.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 20): Your luck in love picks up during the remaining days of September and October promises to be a red-hot month for romance. Meanwhile, a new direction in the world of work brings fulfillment and you could be asked to embark on a business trip before the end of this month. Tuesday is the best day for smoothing a family member's ruffled feathers, but you are advised to avoid further misunderstandings with this person.

AQUARIUS (January 21-February 19): Your skills at breaking the ice ensure that a party this weekend is enjoyed by all. Your gregarious nature can also promote business networking, but beware of others trying to take credit mid-week. Scorpio is likely to try to bask in your sunshine. A partner from your past is forecast to reappear and this could cause friction with a current romantic interest.

PISCES (February 20-March 20): Some careless Pisceans are in danger of being distracted by a red herring this week. A competitor's crafty tactics are likely to help them overtake you in a business deal. Wednesday is best for emphasizing your determination to succeed. Romance will benefit from a more active approach. Pisces is tiring of your half-hearted overtures.

ARIES (March 21-April 20): Endeavor to show some sympathy to a suffering friend this weekend. Even if you foresaw their present situation rapidly approaching, rubbing salt into the wound should be avoided. Your luck in business is strong on Tuesday and the impression you make at an important appointment could open many doors. In romance, a shy Sagittarian may need encouragement to confess their true feelings.

TAURUS (April 21-May 21): Travel is forecast to broaden your mind until mid-October. A modest day trip will stimulate creative ideas. A new romance will spark off away from home and distance will prove to be no barrier. The temptation to overspend will be strong this week, especially when in the company of Leo.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21): No mountain is too high for you to climb this week. Your readiness to reach the summit of a challenge will leave others gasping for breath. Take advantage of these invigorating astral conditions by aiming for more success than you'd previously intended. Thursday is the most fortuitous day for signing agreements. Your understanding attitude allows a partner to pour out their heart this weekend and commitment is highlighted.

CANCER (June 22-July 23): A touchy issue with a friend requires resolving this weekend. If money is concerned, take a serious lesson on board. On Tuesday, romance is sparked by a chance meeting with Taurus. The rest of September work is forecast to bring more fulfilment when you are asked to leave your comfort zone. This is the time to ask for promotion. Wearing chestnut brown can promote confidence.

LEO (July 24-August 22): Most Leos will want to laze around at home this weekend, but friends have other plans. Your willingness to please others could land you in an uncomfortable situation on Sunday – options need to be carefully considered. Getting back into the swing of work after a holiday becomes easier with the addition of a new colleague, but a romantic liaison is inadvisable. Wear the color tangerine to encourage creative dreams.

Hundreds of hoteliers and food and beverage staff from Phuket and even Khao Lak and Krabi descended on the Phuket Graceland Resort & Spa in Patong on September 13-15 to take part in the Food & Beverage Expo 2008.

Gone to the dogs

Phuket's socially responsible party crowd turned out at the Evason Resort & Six Senses Spa in Rawai on September 13 for the Soi Dog Foundation (SDF) Tails at Twilight Annual Fundraising Bone a Fit.

Well-groomed males and fun-loving females, some blaming the weather for the heat, kicked off their heels and partied hard for the benefit of Phuket's stray dogs.

Among the entertainment was the island's own Ricky Zen singing to the siren strains of Colin Hill's guitar.

The event raised more than 700,000 baht, which will go towards the Soi Dog Foundation's sterilization project – which was not performed at the party – and to expansion of SDF projects to Koh Lanta and Khao Lak.

Voluptuous Volvo XC60

‘The smartest and safest model ever’

Volvo Cars recently opened a new dealership in Phuket City with a new concept aimed at attracting expats wishing to buy a luxury motor. Apparently, the dealership is going to provide the kind of service overseas residents are more used to.

Carrying the full Volvo range, from the diminutive C30 to the excellent luxury off-roader, the XC90, if it's a Volvo you are after, then look no further.

However, still to come in 2009 is the mid-size 4x4, the Volvo XC60.

Volvo calls it a “cross-over concept”, meaning it has all the attributes of an off-roader with the comfort and agility of a sporting sedan.

Powered by either a six-cylinder turbocharged gasoline engine or a choice of two five-cylinder turbo diesels, the XC60 promises startling performance, although currently it is unclear which variants will be available in Thailand.

The motor is mated to either a six-speed manual gearbox or a six-speed automatic transmission that can also be operated manually.

All-wheel drive is standard and is electronically controlled; automatically distributing engine torque between the front and rear wheels depending on which pair of wheels has the best grip at the time.

For normal road use, the system directs most of the power to the front wheels.

The XC60 made its debut at the Geneva motor show in March and is predicted to spawn a whole new segment in the industry with at least 10 new crossover vehicles expected to be launched in the next few years.

“In order to succeed with that kind of competition, you have to create a car that stands out in a crowd,” said Volvo Cars president and CEO Fredrik Arp. “This is not only the safest Volvo ever, it's also the most stunning,” he added.

The crossover Volvo incorporates a range of intelligent safety systems that helps the driver avoid accidents. One system is a unique feature that reduces the effect of low-speed impacts that are common in city traffic. If the car is about to drive into the vehicle in front and the driver does not react, the car brakes itself.

“We are the first manufacturer in the world to offer this type of feature as standard,” said Arp. “The new car is packed with our accumulated safety know-how and technology, both when it comes to preventing accidents and protecting the occupants in a collision,” he added.

The vehicle is fitted with roll-stability control and a roll-over protection system. The former is an active function that intervenes in situations when the car is exposed to forces that could cause it to roll over. If a roll-over accident should occur, the protection system deploys the inflatable air curtains.

Compact in overall size, the XC60 is shorter than the XC70, and lower than an XC90. In the next 12 months, Volvo will also introduce a front-wheel drive version powered by a 2.4 liter Euro 5 diesel engine producing 163 bhp (120 kW) and with a CO<sub>2</sub> target of around 170 g/km.

The sales target for the Belgian-built XC60 is more than 50,000 cars a year, with the principal markets being the US, Germany, the UK, Russia and China.

“The fact that China and Russia are among the five largest XC60 markets is proof that these growing markets are now beginning to develop,” said the Volvo CEO. “Both markets will advance even higher up the sales league in future.

“We are aiming primarily at lifestyle, not age,” he pointed out. “You could say that this could be the C30 owner's next car.

“It's so sporty and exciting, but way more capable. An all-round car for the person who lives single in the city and for the young family taking the kids for a weekend of fun and adventure,” he added.

US government steps in to rescue ailing GSEs

Fannie and Freddie avert disaster

A number of analysts and fund managers have commented in recent weeks that Bastille Day, July 14, was the low point of this economic cycle. Unlike 1789, when it was the start of the French Revolution, this year it marked the peak of oil prices at US$147 a barrel.

September 7 will go down as another important day in recent economic history. This date marked the effective nationalization of the government sponsored entities (GSEs) Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac, which sponsor some US$5.3 trillion in mortgage-backed securities in America. This was not a socialist type of nationalization but rather a reluctant takeover of effectively bankrupt entities.

Warren Buffett, reportedly the world's wealthiest man, called this "a big step in the right direction" during a televised interview with television business channel CNBC. It is worthwhile to remember that Warren Buffett had remarked some months ago that the current downturn would be deeper and longer lasting than was generally predicted.

The nationalization of these GSEs is probably more about avoiding economic disaster rather than any instant miracle cure.

Mr Buffett pointed out that the current administration, Congress and Treasury Secretary, were not responsible for the present problems in these GSEs that had been caused years before.

This is accurate. The whole concept of these GSEs operating as listed companies, which meant that they had implicit government guarantees, was a dangerous concept. The preferred shareholders will almost certainly lose all of their investment.

However, it gave a wrong signal to poorly informed retail shareholders who probably thought that with the US federal government in the background their investments would be safe.

The bondholders of these entities have received a 100% guarantee from the government;

this is of great importance and even the Chinese Premier Wen Jiabao congratulated the US on this stance. China's banks and other investors hold hundreds of billions of dollars of these GSE bonds.

James Henderson, a portfolio manager at the long-established fund-management group Henderson Global Investors, is also of the opinion that July 14 was the bottom of the economic cycle.

In a long interview with Bloomberg Television, he stated that he did not believe that we would see a V-shaped recovery but rather one that was bumpy with lots of bad news and worries. He said he expected stock markets to have made good progress in an improving environment by 2010.

The US nationalization of the two GSEs brought an immediately worldwide reaction. Stock markets in Asia jumped in value, in the case of South Korea and Taiwan by more than 5% in a single day.

European markets also joined in the euphoria when they opened, although computer problems on the London Stock Exchange caused difficulties in measuring the real rise in Europe's largest stock market.

Predictably, the US also recorded sharp rises. However, this knee-jerk reaction deserves further comment. Naturally, before the nationalization, many market players had been actively shorting shares, especially in the banking sector.

After the announcement there was a desperate scramble to go "long", in other words, "short" positions had to be "covered" by actual buying of bank shares. Many banks, especially in Europe, suddenly found their shares rose by double-digit percentages in a single day. It was virtually a case of the more unloved a bank's shares had been before the announcement, the more its shares rose.

Simply put, the real value had not changed that much but fear of loss and, in many cases, not wanting to miss out on a huge party brought buyers into droves. This cannot continue unabated for long.

It was not only stock markets that felt these effects, as bond markets and currency markets also gyrated strongly. A number of currencies rose strongly against the US dollar only to retreat hours later.

David Bloom, head of currency strategy at HSBC, believes the strong US dollar trend is still intact. He did point out that it was not easy to "short" Asian currencies, such as the baht.

This, he explained, was due to the national central banks, such as the Bank of Thailand, that were readily prepared to intervene in currency markets and had substantial foreign exchange reserves to back their policy.

This is not 1997 revisited. Regional currencies show little prospect of significant weakening, although this is possible if the US dollar should start to show too much strength against other global currencies. In that situation, Asian central banks will no doubt allow their currencies to weaken slightly although in a "managed" manner.

Oil prices continue to fall. Analysts in this sector point to a number of reasons including simple demand destruction.

When oil romped ever higher through the US$130 and $140 a barrel, consumers worldwide went out of their way to reduce consumption as much as possible.

In many cases, they had no option; oil had simply become too expensive. High oil prices also spurred moves towards alternative sources of energy and large vehicles for private use became almost overnight seriously unwanted items. Sales of SUVs in the United States almost collapsed and even secondhand prices had their own market "crash".

In the aftermath of the 1970s oil crises, old habits quickly returned. It will be interesting to see if it is any different this time around.

Phuket scores high with 'Smart' travelers

PHUKET: Phuket was voted second-best Asian holiday destination overall, with a number of island resorts ranking highly in the Smart Travel Asia reader's poll for 2008.

Bali took top honors in the destination category for the second year running.

Amanpuri Resort took top spot in the leisure hotels and resorts category, while Twinpalms Phuket, JW Marriott Phuket Resort & Spa and the Banyan Tree Phuket were in the top 25.

Amanpuri, Banyan Tree and JW Marriott were also listed among the top 10 in the "best spa" hotels and resorts category, while Le Meridien Khao Lak Beach Resort & Spa was ranked 18th.

The Sheraton Grande Laguna Phuket was the only Phuket resort named in the conference hotel category, earning 11th spot among the 25 hotels listed. The Grand Hyatt Hotel in Hong Kong took the top honor in this category.

"We are delighted to have received this award for the second year running and to have maintained this level of recognition within the conference industry," said Sheraton's general manager Jan Kirstein.

Smart Travel Asia, based in Hong Kong, has more than one million readers worldwide. It features independent hotel, spa, airline and shopping reviews. The reader's poll was held over three months, from May through July.

Airlines, hotels and destinations were the focus of the annual poll, which the online magazine said was "aimed squarely at serious, frequent travelers, in the know".

Hong Kong Express starts Phuket flights

PHUKET: Hong Kong Express Airways on September 10 launched its direct-flight between Hong Kong and Phuket as part of its expansion throughout the region.

Initially, flights will operate every Wednesday and Sunday, and at least two flights a week will be added in mid-October. The flight schedule is confirmed until the end of October, after which the airline will issue new timetables for all of its destinations.

The airline is also adding Osaka, Denpasar and Manila to its flight schedule this month.

Raymond Ng, director of commercial at Hong Kong Express Airways said, "All of these destinations have been chosen for their popularity, particularly as 'hot' holiday spots, but also as important business hubs for those who conduct work across Asia."

"By offering these routes we are giving the people of Hong Kong more choice in the way they choose to fly. And we will continue to do so with the addition of more destinations in the coming months."

Over the past few months, Hong Kong Express has expanded its network and now flies to 18 destinations across Indonesia, Malaysia, Vietnam, Thailand, China, Japan and Taiwan.

Established in 2004, Hong Kong Express Airways operates a fleet of new Boeing 737-800 aircraft together with its sister airline, Hong Kong Airlines.

One-Two-Go remains grounded until October

Nok Air Phuket service stalls

By Alastair Carthew

PHUKET: Controversial low-cost carrier One-Two-Go will remain grounded until at least October, but its owner is certain the airline will eventually resume services.

Udom Tantiprasongchi, founder and chairman of One-Two-Go, told the Gazette this week he was confident the airline will resume its Phuket service.

"We have done everything we have to do. It is now up to us to decide when we resume flying," he said.

Mr Udom admitted that the resumption of services would "honestly not happen this month" and would come in October at the earliest.

One-Two-Go grounded its fleet of eight McDonnell Douglas MD-80 jet aircraft citing financial conditions and the need to restructure.

The self-imposed grounding came just two days before Thailand Department Of Civil Aviation (DCA) issued a flight ban for the airline for allegedly breaching safety regulations, having a lack of proper airline management and for falsification of documents by some pilots who had misrepresented their credentials.

The government suspension, to August 21, was subsequently extended by the DCA to September 20.

One-Two-Go's self-imposed termination of services were set to conclude September 15, but neither deadline will be met, Mr Udom said.

Recent political unrest including the two-day closure of Phuket International Airport (PIA) by anti-government protesters and a subsequent drop in demand were among the reasons the airline is not yet ready to resume flights to Phuket, he said.

Mr Udom said he had received many emails urging the airline to resume flying.

Another obstacle to restarting service was that some staff had left to do other jobs, he said.

However, Mr Udom pledged to "come back again, stronger and with better quality."

Meanwhile, in further bad news for the island's immediate tourism prospects, the Gazette has confirmed that low-cost carrier Nok Air has suspended its remaining flights to Phuket, most likely for the rest of the low season.

Nok Air on August 1 suspended all flights to Phuket, but subsequently resumed Saturday and Sunday flights from August 9.

Many Nok Air staff, including some in Phuket, lost their jobs when the airline ceased local operations.

In an email reply received by the Gazette on September 13, Nok Air's Chief Executive Officer wrote, "Yes, we have suspended flights to Phuket for this month. We will resume [flying to] Phuket in the very near future after we have arranged our new TPI [timetable planning] for the coming high season."

The high season in Phuket nominally kicks off on November 1, with the Phuket Carnival in Patong.

With rival low-cost carrier One-Two-Go grounded until at least October, all regularly-scheduled flights between Bangkok and Phuket currently fly out of Suvarnabhumi Airport.

Both Nok Air and One-Two-Go use domestic hub Don Mueang Airport as their base of operations.

ITB Asia to tackle critical travel issues

SINGAPORE: Travel industry leaders from around the world will convene at the inaugural ITB Asia convention at the Suntec complex in Singapore to discuss critical issues affecting the global travel industry today and look at potential trends in travel for the future.

Organized by Messe Berlin (Singapore) Pte Ltd in conjunction with Singapore Tourism Board, the event on October 22-24 will feature up to 500 exhibiting companies from around the world, covering not only the leisure market, but also corporate and MICE travel.

Up to 5,000 travel delegates from more than 50 countries are expected to attend.

CEOs representing leading brands in travel Starwood, Accor, Jumeirah, Carlson, Sabre and others will chart the future and lay bare the opportunities and challenges in all sectors of travel.

Peter Long, CEO of global tour operator TUI Travel, will discuss the kinds of holidays consumers are now demanding and a futurist will pose the question, 'Can virtual travel ever replace physical travel?'

"There are definite trends taking place in tourism that we need to heed the evolution of the hotel industry to meet a changing customer, the realities facing global tour operators as they expand their reach into new markets, the increased penetration of technology into our everyday lives, and how that technology is changing the way we book travel and communicate," said Yeoh Siew Hoon, ITB Asia Convention program organizer.

Satellite events happening in and around ITB Asia include the Web in Travel (WIT) event on October 21-22.

Entering the bright welcome area of the Sala Phuket Resort & Spa on Mai Khao Beach is like stepping onto the cool surface of the water. Further inside the resort, down a narrow passageway, is the Sala Spa, which reveals itself in dramatic fashion with its stunning blend of modern design and historical Sino-Portuguese architecture.

The understated, calm beauty of the place creates the perfect atmosphere in which to be restored to well being.

Though open for only nine months on 40 rai on Phuket's most peaceful west-coast beach, the resort has already garnered rave reviews on websites such as tripadvisor.com, and the Sala Spa has become an attraction in itself. In April, both the resort and its spa were featured in the Condé Nast Traveler Hot List for 2008.

Spa manager, U-Thumporn "Gee" Sripaew, said that the spa not only serves resort guests, but offers treatments to many walk-in clients as well. It is especially popular with honeymooning couples, she said.

The spa provides several kinds of massages, facial treatments using the French Jurlique and Pevonia cosmetics brands, body scrubs and wraps, foot therapies and beauty services.

Treatments are given in five private villas, which all include double beds, and three pavilion massage areas in front of the beach.

There are separate men's and ladies' steam rooms, changing areas and lockers and a large relaxing area with a cool water theme. The spa area also has a gym and beauty salon.

Each spa villa has the atmosphere of a private garden retreat

Assistant Spa Manager Suphansa "Sa" Diman said that all 14 therapists have worked in spas of five-star hotels and all can speak English. She recommended having a body scrub at least twice a month to remove dead cells and keep the skin fresh and healthy.

Prices range from 1,400 baht for a 30-minute eye-brightening treatment to 13,500 baht for a package such as the 3½-hour Couples Luxurious Asian Ritual that includes steam, floral bath, body scrub, massage and facial treatments.

The spa menu is reviewed and changed every six months as therapists try to come up with the best combinations of treatments for clients, Ms Gee explained. There are also daily special promotions, she said.

Sheila Weller had written five books of non-fiction when it occurred to her to write the biography of three female singer-songwriters whom she had idolized since childhood. Four years later, after exhaustive research and multiple interviews, she has published Girls Like Us (Atria Books, New York, 2008, 584pp), subtitled “Carole King, Joni Mitchell, Carole Simon - and the Journey of a Generation”.

And what a journey!

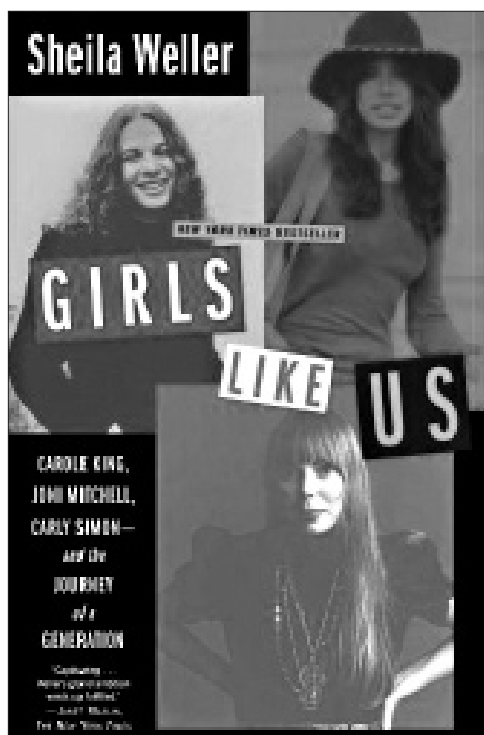

What do Leonard Cohen, Jackson Browne, Sam Shepherd, Graham Nash, David Crosby, Jack Nicholson, Warren Beatty and James Taylor all have in common? They all slept with Joni Mitchell. And these were just the famous ones. They were all entranced by her beauty and once she invited them into a room to hear her songs, they were enraptured, enthralled, blown away.

Not that she was particularly promiscuous, but she was determined to live a life as far apart from her small town Canadian upbringing as possible.

When she found herself pregnant and abandoned in the bohemian section of Toronto in 1961, she had her daughter in secret, out of family shame, and gave her up for adoption. This left a psychic scar that would last for life and reoccur in the haunting, highly charged poetic songs she wrote over the next four decades.

Carole Klein, a Jewish girl from Brooklyn, picked her new name King out of a phone book. She became pregnant early and teamed up with her new husband Gerry Goffin to write such classic early soul music songs as You Make Me Feel

Three Rocking

Like a Natural Woman, Up on the Roof, Under the Boardwalk and Will You Love Me Tomorrow. Her solo album Tapestry in 1971 is recognized as one of the greatest of all time – one that she was never able to match.

Carly Simon was a mixed-up rich kid from the Simon & Shuster publishing dynasty. She lived in a high-powered social whirl, amid many breakdowns, until her breakthrough hit You're So Vain. This is not about Mick Jagger, who sang backup, as widely supposed, but Warren Beatty. Jagger was her lover, too, as was James Taylor, whom she eventually married and divorced.

These thumbnail descriptions don't do justice to Weller's exhaustive research and analysis that provide full-blown portraits of three eminent divas of '60s and '70s lyric confessional music. This is a journey of a generation indeed, from 1950s middle-class respectability to new frontiers of sex and rock 'n' roll – none of them had much truck with drugs except for the occasional toké.

Weller captures 1960s New York zeitgeist perfectly as Joni Mitchell moves into a Chelsea apartment for a period of frantic creativity:

Both Sides Now became a personal anthem to women in their twenties in 1968 in the same way My Way would become to males.

“In their tiny-mirror-studded embroidered Moroccan vests over flounce-sleeved, stock-tied blouses tucked into jeans or mini-skirts, silk scarves pirate-tied low on their brows... countless young women – some enduring heartbreak over the shadier guys who'd replaced the boring college boys they had happily jettisoned – heard in Joni's words a shared epiphany about the emotional risks they had chosen.”

All three went through multiple marriages, divorces and romantic break-ups, and as they entered middle age, took younger lovers that never worked out. They also found their music out of fashion. By the mid-1980s, all three were “in the shadows; it was the era of Madonna and Cyndi Lauper. Carly and Carole and Joni's generation – their bulging emotional dossier, all those lessons learned – was irrelevant.”

Nonetheless, all three scored comeback albums after the turn of the millennium despite, or because of, late-in-life romantic dreams deferred yet again.

And there's a note of redemption. In a beautifully written passage, Weller describes the improbable reunion of Joni Mitchell and her long-lost daughter in 1997. The final round of the circle game.

The trio of divas are now grandmothers. Weller concludes: “And so the river flows, their circle game repeats, the rutted road gets easier to walk down.”

“And those is how it is for all three of these women – all three of these girls like us – who were born into one female culture and changed it – year by year, song

Off the SHELF

By James Eckardt

English and Thai take rather different approaches to personal pronouns. In English, there's a small set of words we use in most situations: I, we, you, he, she, they, it. In the object case there are a few that change: me, us, him, her.

Unless you're reading Shakespeare or the Bible, there's not a whole lot more to know about English pronouns. Most native English speakers don't know how lucky they have it in this regard.

Addressing people in Thai means you have to define your relationship to them: familiar or formal, friend or family, superior or subordinate.

Before we go on, here's an ultra-quick refresher course: There are three “persons” in grammar. First person refers to the speaker (I, we). Second person refers to the listener (you). Third person refers to third parties (he, she, they).

You may already know some basic Thai pronouns, such as:

ผม /phom/ (first person, for men)

ฉัน /chan/ (first person, for women)

เรา /rao/ (first person, plural)

คุณ /khun/ (second person)

เขา /khao/ (third person).

Use these exclusively and you'll get your point across. But for native speakers, there's much more to it.

Thai kinship terms – the words used with various relatives – form the foundation of how Thais address one another in everyday casual interactions.

Words such as แม่ /mae/ “mother”, พ่อ /phaw/ “father”, and ลูก /luuk/ “child” can be used in all three persons. For example: แม่ซื้อขนมมาให้ลูก /mae sue khanom maa hai luuk/ (mother speaking to child) “I bought you a treat” and ลูกกวาดบ้านให้แม่ /luuk kwaat baan hai mae/ (child speaking to mother) “I swept the house for you.”

หนูบอกแม่ว่าไม่อยากไป /nou bawk mae waa mai yaak pai/ (child speaking of mother) “I told her that I don't want to go.”

Also notice that หนู /nou/ literally “mouse” or “rat” is used as a pronoun for a young child, in first or second person, and also by coquettish young women with older men. It is supposed to sound cute.

The point is that these “kinship” terms can be used to converse informally with anyone, not just blood relatives. Thais call this นับญาติ /nap yaat/ “count (as a) relative”.

If you're talking to someone within reasonable proximity of your own age, there's พี่ /phii/ “older sibling” for people older than you, and น้อง /nawng/ “younger sibling” for your juniors.

So you might use พ่อ /phaw and แม่ /mae with people around your parents' age. ลุง /lung/ “uncle” and ป้า /paa/ “aunt” are commonly used for folks slightly older than your parents.

For the elderly, there's ตา /taa/ “(maternal) grandfather” and ยาย /yaa/ “(maternal) grandmother”. Especially when talking with older people, often คุณ /khun is added to show more respect, becoming คุณตา /khun taa and คุณยาย /khun yaai.

For some reason, Thais don't use the terms ปู่ /puu/ “(paternal) grandfather” or ย่า /yaa/ “(paternal) grandmother” for this purpose, though.

This practice is generally viewed as friendly, but it's not always appropriate. It can be difficult to know which terms to use when – and with whom. To many Thai women in their forties, there's nothing worse than being called ป้า /paa by a stranger. You have been warned.

If you're not sure, follow the native speaker's lead. If someone talking to you uses ป้า /paa to refer to herself, then it's safe to use.

In some settings, a job title also commonly takes on the function of pronoun. At the doctor's office, Thais refer to the doctor as หมอ /maw or คุณหมอ /khun maw, and the doctor will likely refer to him- or herself as หมอ /maw when addressing patients.

Similarly, teachers are typically known as คุณครู /khun khruu to their students, and also use ครู /khruu for themselves.

Getting personal, with

For professors and some other teachers, อาจารย์ /aajaan works the same way.

You might say, Hey! We do that in English, too. Sure, in English we say things like “Doctor, what's this growth on my elbow?” or “Teacher, Sally kicked me in the shins.”

The thing to remember about Thai is that these words tend to entirely replace pronouns. In Thai you might ask the equivalent of “What does doctor think?” คุณหมอก็คิดว่าอย่างไร /khun maw khit waa yaangrai (instead of “What do you think?”), or “Is teacher tired?” คุณครูเหนื่อยไหม /khun khruu nueai mai (instead of “Are you tired?”)

You should start to get the picture by now. Time to get out there and start chatting with your newfound relatives.

NOTE: The phonetic characters in this column do not carry all the correct Thai tones. To ensure you have the correct pronunciation, ask a native Thai speaker to read them out to you – or better yet, study and learn to get the correct tone directly from the Thai spelling!

For the record

As if the recent drop in tourist arrivals due to political factors hadn't hurt bar and pub owners enough this low season, some publicans on the island have been hit with huge fines for publicly playing copyrighted music without a license.

The crackdown has left most bar owners confused, with many scrambling to hide hard drives loaded with illegally obtained MP3 recordings or stacks of illegal CDs, which are easily bought nearly anywhere on the island.

Well known to tourists, but apparently invisible to police, are numerous back-room shops in Patong filled wall-to-wall with pirate computer software, CDs and DVDs. Most of these include a selection of pornography that is illegal anywhere in Thailand, "intellectual property" considerations aside. If you don't know where to find one, simply ask any of the smarmy touts who accost foreign tourists: they would be more than happy to guide you in the right direction.

Similar outlets can be found in other destinations around the country popular with foreign tourists, many of whom consider their pirate-goods shopping spree among the highlights of their visits – the cost savings a way of justifying the cost of the trip.

If there is to be a crackdown on intellectual property (IP) violations, these shops are where it should start – or better yet, with the parties that produce these products or smuggle them into the country by the hundreds of thousands.

Unfortunately, the recent IP crackdown in many ways resembles the on-again, off-again narcotics sweeps at pubs and discos with patrons forced to submit urine samples for on-the-spot drug testing.

Only small time dealers and end users are caught – while the influential figures behind the industry get off scot-free.

While hardly a day passes without a ya bah (methamphetamine) bust being reported in the local press, when was the last time a major trafficker was busted or a large methamphetamine lab raided anywhere in the country? The same applies to pirated CDs, DVDs and similar products, most of which are reported to be produced in China and smuggled into the country.

While the Gazette supports the rights of artist to be compensated for the works they produce – indeed, our own intellectual property is often violated via the Internet – current law enforcement in this area are far too selective and serves as yet another fertile avenue for extortion, corruption, blackmail and bribery.

In terms of music licensing, the government should set up a network of "one stop" shops, explaining to law-abiding citizens exactly what is required of them and making it easy for them to obtain.

It's the thought that counts

I have just read the article in today's Phuket Gazette regarding a memorial service for the victims of the One-Two-Go crash at Phuket Airport last September [see page 1]. My husband and I lost our 22-year-old son Alex and his girlfriend Bethan in the crash. We can't believe a memorial service has not been organized by the director of the airport.

We are unable to be at the place where our only son lost his life, and it would have been of great comfort to us to know that the employees of the airport were thinking of all the families who have suffered as a result of this accident. Small gestures mean a lot.

The air that I breathe

Green Patong? I can confirm that two-stroke jet-skis are terrible for the environment. Jet-skis can burn up to 10 gallons of fuel an hour spewing out 55 kilograms of carbon dioxide per hour in the process.

Around 25% of fuel is unburnt as it leaves the exhaust. I counted 25 of these contraptions in the waters off Patong Beach one morning and each jet-ski races around the bay for about six hours a day. This means that about 8,000kg of carcinogenic carbon dioxide is released into the air every day – or 250 tonnes of cancer-causing gases per month.

I recommend that local health authorities visit the beach and smell the deadly gasoline and exhaust fumes and then make the decision to either ban the jet-skis or to put a sign up on the beach: "Warning – Air On The Beach Is Carcinogenic".

Most tourists go to Patong to relax and enjoy fresh air, not to ride jet-skis. Protect the environment and stop global warming by either banning jet-skis or by allowing only four-stroke jet-skis, which do not do so much destruction to the atmosphere.

Beach road parking for tuk tuks

As I recall, some months ago it was written in the Phuket Gazette that with the start of the new high season in November this year, the tuk tuks will be permitted to stop their vehicles on beach road only to pick up passengers but not to park their hundreds of vehicles there anymore.

Is that still the rule to come? By the way, it would be appreciated much from my side and maybe also by others who live here or just enjoy holidays here. Tuk tuks should be available to serve the public, but not to rule the public...

More, tuk tuk fares should be fair and fixed, which also could show higher evening and night fares – as is done in Singapore – but it should be transparent to all.

Peter Keemss

A stray holiday away from home

Hi, I recently visited Thailand for the first time. Everywhere I went from Phuket to Patong to Phi Phi to Khao Lak, I saw starving, malnourished and sometimes pregnant stray cats and dogs. This saddened me a great deal and not one day passed that I didn't see a defenseless hungry cat or dog.

The locals seem to ignore them. This is distressing and it ruined my holiday. It is also a bad reflection of the Thai people and the country.

Sterilization and euthanasia are two very important steps to reducing this problem. What is being done to address this huge problem in Thailand? It should be treated with great importance.

Helipads Hellastupid

I read with some alarm about the Navy's plan to build helipads on outlying islands in order to make it easier to medivac sick or injured tourists to the mainland for treatment [see 'Navy plans for medivac helipads', Gazette issue of September 13].

Apart from the obvious environmental impact of covering national park land with impervious materials, this will also create an eyesore.

As anyone who has ever stood near a helipad when a chopper is coming down knows, the sound is deafening. What will the reaction be on local wildlife?

Also, once the pads are there how can we know they won't be used by the Navy for training or recreational purposes, thus scaring off tourists?

If the Navy is really worried about tourist safety I think they should help out the Marine Police and other agencies to ensure that ferries and tour boats are operating safely.

AIRPORT SIEGE FALLOUT

Restoring tourists' trust is key

Government departments, provincial authorities and agencies in the private sector have made a concerted effort to bring things back to normal since the People's Alliance for Democracy (PAD) protests forced the closure of Phuket Airport.

Altogether 180 flights to and from Phuket were canceled, and 30,000 tourists were unable to travel during the three days that the airport was closed. The Phuket PAD leaders agreed to move their protests to outside Provincial Hall after we held negotiations with them.

I also had to negotiate with those people who lost income because of the protests, such as taxi and limousine operators. They were becoming increasingly angry with how the protests were affecting them financially, which could have resulted in clashes between the two groups if the protests went on any longer.

Eventually the protesters realized that they were creating problems for virtually everyone on the island as tourism is the lifeblood for most of the businesses here.

Restoring confidence. Things seem to be back to normal again, but we now have to make an effort to put right some of the negative media coverage that appeared in other countries.

There are many people and organizations that we need to communicate with so that they can reassure the public in their respective countries that it is safe to travel to Phuket, especially with those countries that issued warnings to the public advising people not to travel to Thailand.

Reports by the BBC and CNN gave somewhat sensational accounts of the protests, which made many people wary of traveling here, so we need the help of the media to send out a more positive message and show the world that the situation isn't as bad as it was initially reported.

In the last few days, I have

The Governor's Letter

This week, Phuket Governor Niran Kalayanamit talks about the impact of the airport closure due to the PAD anti-government protests and his confidence that the island's tourism will soon be back to normal in the run-up to the high season. He also reiterates the need for the central government to understand the long-term benefits of investing in some of the mega projects proposed for the island.

spoken with ambassadors from the UK, America, Australia, New Zealand and Sweden, all of whom wanted to assess the situation for themselves.

They were reassured that tourists from their countries would be safe if they came to Phuket.

The Minister of Tourism and Sports Weerasak Kowsurat held a press conference on this subject in Phuket on September 10. He also spoke to a number of ambassadors and tourism industry representatives, assuring them that every effort is being made to create international awareness that Phuket remains as a safe destination.

The Tourism Authority of Thailand (TAT) will have to quickly embark on more international roadshows as they did after the 2004 tsunami, although the situation is certainly not as drastic as it was then.

The TAT and the Thai Hotel Association have already begun to discuss and put into action ways of encouraging tourists to return in time for the high season.

The upcoming vegetarian festival should see many tourists coming to Phuket, so that will help increase confidence among them, which will be passed on by word of mouth.

With all these efforts being made, I really don't think it will take long to restore confidence in tourists. I am confident that we are on track for a fairly normal high season in terms of tourist numbers.

Of course, it's normal for people who have never been here to be frightened when they hear that airports have been closed, but there has already been an increase in flights to and from Bangkok as the high season approaches, so some confidence has obviously already been restored.

Big project roundup. Having looked into the possibility of developing Koh Aew and Koh Tanan into a "Monkey Island", the land in question is actually designated as crown property, which makes things much more complicated than if it were private land, so no one should be jumping to conclusions about whether Monkey Island will become a reality any time soon.

A lot more research will have to be conducted before anyone could say whether Monkey Island is a possibility, including public opinion surveys and investigations by provincial authorities into the impact of such a project.

Regarding the development of an international conference center on the island, this is something we should definitely pursue with a sense of urgency. Without international conference and exhibition facilities on the island, we are missing out on huge opportunity to host international events.

Ambassadors from the UK, America, Australia, New Zealand and Sweden were reassured that tourists from their countries would be safe if they came to Phuket.

The 150-rai plot of public land recently approved in Mai Khao is the most suitable site. Boats will be able to enter the bay and it's a very beautiful site with a beach that stretches 800 meters.

The government is prepared to help finance the project to a ceiling of 1 billion (1,000 million) baht, but estimates put the cost of developing a conference and exhibition center at twice that, so we will welcome private investment as well.

A rail link to Phuket is also part of the economic plan to develop the southern region, but the government just doesn't have the funding at the moment, so that is another project that will probably require private investment if it is ever going to happen.

It's a matter of individual perspectives, but imagine if Phuket had a rail link like France's TGV. It would make Phuket so much more accessible and would bring in many more tourists as people could leave Bangkok and be in Phuket within just two hours.

Whenever large developments such as the rail link are proposed, there are always interest groups who rally against them because they worry about their potential loss of income or immediate impact on the environment.

However, it's important to implement projects that make travel options available to visitors and will benefit the general public in the long run.

The land bridge proposed to link Nakhon Sri Thammarat and Phuket is another infrastructure project that has come up against opposition from interest groups who worry about the impact of the construction work that would take place building it.

Another project that has been delayed over and over again is the proposal to set up a duty-free zone, which has attracted interest from Japanese and Korean investors. I proposed those ideas during the Thaksin administration, but the changes in government have stalled those plans.

Investors from Dubai have said they would invest in an economic trade zone, which would result in much broader benefits to the region than a duty-free zone. Among other things, Phuket could become an international IT hub if this were to happen, but what we really need to make these projects viable is sufficient infrastructure.

The central government must become more involved in these ideas and set realistic budgets for them to be achieved.

As it is at the moment, the central government sets a yearly budget for Phuket of between 100 and 200 million baht, which simply isn't enough to keep up with the pace at which Phuket is developing.

It must be made clear that Phuket warrants status as a special economic zone, similar to those in China and Dubai.

If these kinds of projects ever get the go ahead, then the area's economy will grow and the central government will ultimately reap the economic benefits. There is no shortage of investors ready and waiting for such opportunities.

For example, Korean conglomerate Lotte is ready to invest in developing Phuket Bay from Saphan Hin to Rassada Harbor. We have to take these opportunities because if we wait for government funding then we'll be waiting too long.

Last month, Looking Back mentioned that Capt Francis Light had the ambition to acquire Phuket for the British East India Company to use as a trading base. Although he came close to realizing his plan, a change in the tide of history foiled his attempts and forced him to leave the island for good. Phuket has since remained undisputed Siamese territory.

To understand how Capt Light could so easily have laid claims to one of the largest islands on the west coast of Siam, it is important to know a little about what was happening in the rest of Siam during that time.

At the height of its power, Ayudhaya, the former capital of Siam, had absolute power in the region. Its rulers subjugated dominions stretching far north beyond Chiang Mai and far south into the many small kingdoms and sultanates of the Malay Peninsula.

The many towns and cities that were under Ayudhaya's control were never fully independent, but many of their rulers were allowed to rule independently as long as they remained loyal to the King of Siam, who reigned from Ayudhaya.

By 1767, Ayudhaya was no longer the formidable power it once was. After several wars with the Burmese, whose kingdom had expanded unrelentingly into Siam's domain, Ayudhaya in April 1767 was attacked by invading Burmese forces. The city fell to the invaders and was sacked.

After the fall of Ayudhaya, the remaining vassals of the old capital that remained unconquered by the Burmese became completely independent. Most of the cities in the north that were previously under Siamese control fell to the Burmese, but the southern cities on the Malay Peninsula, most of them unaffected by the invasion, suddenly realized the opportunity to declare independence.

Nakhon Sri Thammarat declared its independence and expanded its hegemony over many smaller towns in its vicinity. The same move was followed by many other sultanates in the far south. The old Siamese kingdom shattered like a fallen mirror. Lands that previously belonged to Ayudhaya, which no other power had dared lay claim to, were now up for grabs to anyone who could muster any kind of army to take them over.

It was during this time that Capt Francis Light came to Thalang in 1772. Thalang, as Phuket was then called, had been under Ayudhaya's rule for centuries. Capt Light's memoirs written in 1787 mention that after Ayudhaya was sacked and the Siamese lost their freedom to the Burmese, Phuket was captured and came under the rule of Kedah, a sultanate that declared independence from Siam after Ayudhaya's fall.

Known to their Siamese conquerors as Tsai-Buri, the sultanate of Kedah took this opportunity to expand into the region and incorporated Phuket as their vassal.

According to Capt Light's memoirs, the Malay rulers of Kedah could not hold Phuket for long and in time the locals revolted against their harsh, but weak rulers. The Malays were expelled from the island thereafter.

A year after Ayudhaya was sacked, HM King Taksin was able to rally men under his command and launched a counter attack against the Burmese. His attempts were successful and liberated Siam from the invaders.

HM King Taksin and was crowned King of Siam in his new capital city, Thon Buri in 1768. Soon after, Nakhon Sri Thammarat swore allegiance to the new dynasty in Thon Buri. Eight other large towns in the south followed this move, including Thalang. From then on, many Siamese governors successively ruled Thalang by appointment of the king, each lasting only short periods of time.

In his memoirs, Capt Light wrote that one of these governors, possibly Phraya Ard, was a greedy and untrustworthy opportunist. Seizing an opportunity when Siam was still being pieced back together, the governor sent him a letter offering to sell Thalang to his company.

Capt Light wrote that he did not reply to this letter, but the governor sent him a second letter suggesting that if the amount of money demanded was duly paid to him, Capt Light could have Phuket.

The governor was ready to sell Phuket by contract or mutual understanding, whichever way the captain preferred. It was clear that Capt Light was interested. In his memoirs, Capt Light boldly stated that there is no other land more valuable than that of Thalang and it would be worth every penny to the British East India Company if they were to accept this deal.

LOOKING BACK

By Anand Singh

But before the deal could be closed, there was a peasant uprising in Thalang. The governor, who led his men to suppress the rebellion, was shot dead in battle. After him, Phraya Surintraja was appointed Governor of Thalang in 1776.

Even though the first attempt to sell the island was unsuccessful, Capt Light clung to his ambitions. In 1777, he wrote a letter to Lord Warren Hastings, the Governor-General of India, suggesting his case to make Phuket a base for the East India Company and asking for Lord Hastings' support in this plan.

By 1780, Light's relationship with the governor of Thalang had soured and his trade on the island was not going as well as it had before. He quarreled with the governor often. In one incident, Light accused the governor of treating him unfairly in a trade deal he made in Thalang.

According to his memoirs, Light had sold 1,700 sacks of rice to the townspeople and was supposed to receive payments of tin within three months.

The governor, however, forbade the people of Thalang to pay Capt Light. To add insult to injuries, his house at Ban Tha Rua, which was located very close to the present site of the Heroines' Monument, was broken into and robbed.

For this, Capt Light blamed the governor for not maintaining security around his residences. Unhappy about the way he was being treated, Capt Light decided to leave Phuket in 1780, after living in Thalang for nearly a decade.

Capt Francis Light was most unhappy about what he believed was an attempt to force him off the Phuket. By now it seemed that negotiations alone would probably fail in securing the island for the British.

There is reason to believe that perhaps Capt Francis Light may have wanted to use force to take over the island, with military help from the East India Company.

From Mexico to Hawaii to Southeast Asia, mangrove forests have always been part of my travels, but the first person to introduce them to me up close was Fred Hennings on Fiji's Taveuni Island.

The river was thick with vines blocking the midday sun, but we found a small channel and paddled under the canopy into a world like none I had seen before or since. The Vure Vure River empties from a lush valley, depositing its host of nutrients into the mangrove forests.

The rich and dense variety of the canopy darkened the swamp to a kind of midday dusk with just enough light to plot our course through trunks spaced just enough apart for our kayaks to pass through.

High-tide provided a one-foot clearance above the root mat, so we were careful to steer clear of Brugeria, spiked air-breathing roots and Rhizophora buttress roots, as they blended with the panoply of species around them.

It didn't take long to realize that penetrating the mangroves deep enough to make a difference could not be done without damaging this fragile environment, even in kayaks, so after a brief foray, we headed back to the main channel, which was never more than 10 meters wide. This magnificent experience was capped off by the sighting of a variety of exotic birds, including brightly colored lorikeets and parrots as well as Pacific Reef Egrets, similar to those seen in Thailand.

I'm writing this on Taveuni, having just returned from the mangroves, which remain much the same as they were a decade ago. This fertile place still exudes life-energy. With the saltwaters of Vure Vure Bay just down the channel, it's easy to understand the concept of the Nursery of the Sea.

Thanks to several similarly well-preserved estuaries and its relatively low population, Taveuni is one of those rare places where fisheries remain in balance with the island's needs.

The lessons I learned following that day were overwhelming and remain central to my theme, but Fred was about more than just mangroves. He managed the Salialevu plantation, at the southwest end of the rugged and remote Ravilevu coastline.

Vure-Vure lies at the northeast end of the same coastline. Operating from both ends of this magical stretch of Earth, Fred quietly cultivated an awareness of its unique beauty, which, in turn, helped to keep the area preserved in its pristine natural state.

Birdlife International claims that "Taveuni is exceptional in having retained a high proportion of forestation together with an intact ridge-to-reef ecosystem, something exceptionally rare in the Pacific." As Ravilevu was my second destination outside Hawaii, I felt especially proud of these comments and was grateful to the man who lived in the middle of the mangroves at both ends of this exceptional eco-system.

Quiet Man of the Mangroves

Access to Taveuni was formidable, with its 100-meter cliffs and waterfalls cascading directly into the sea. Past Lavena, the cliffs provided few landing sites with vertical access possible in just three spots along seven miles of surf breaking on rock beaches. This rugged geology had served as a great conservation ally.

Fred's style afforded him respect and influence. Taveuni's soft-spoken approach as an environmentalist was a natural proponent of enlightened human resources, which garnered him true island-wide respect as a gentle yet competent manager.

Fred served as the pro bono Chairman of Taveuni's Hospital Association and held volunteer leadership positions with, among others, the Tourism Promotion Board, the School Board and the Chamber of Commerce.

Somehow, Fred tied all these interests into the same adventure. All of Taveuni, including yours truly, have benefited enormously.

Most of Taveuni is accessed by a dirt road, but, despite this remote setting, all residents are truly bi-lingual. Fijian is spoken in the home, but everybody also speaks perfect English.

People living in grass shacks called bure were well up on current events and received excellent coverage of the Olympics. Fresh water was plentiful, and the bounty of the sea still existed, perhaps because there wasn't one Mercedes on the island.

About 65% of the island is deemed "Protected Area" and the Bouma Reserve – a community-based tourism initiative – offers four different experiences along one of the World's greenest coastlines.

Vaitabu Marine reserve provides offers excellent snorkeling on a pristine reef and the Vidawa rainforest hike takes visitors inland to the lush Vure Vure river valley.

The Bouma Falls, a low-impact waterfall hike, enjoys the greatest popularity. Lavena, launching point of my Ravilevu kayak trips, offers a coastal walk, packed with birds, beautiful vistas and a protected white sand beach with an excellent river-and-waterfall hike. There is also a sea kayaking day trip to a triple-tiered waterfall. All the activities are low-cost and operated directly by local people.

The revenue that the locals derive from these activities isn't great. The Lavena Coastal walk, for example, costs only 200 baht. However, the seas are bountiful with fresh fish (there is not a fish farm on the island) and the river valley is lush with fresh fruits and vegetables. There are no beggars on Taveuni.

Westward from Lavena, the sea along the coastline gets pretty rough, with the only real landing area at Salialevu River, 25 kilometers from Lavena.

These unusually rugged conditions serve to keep Ravilevu well preserved. Beyond Salialevu, there is nothing until you reach the other side of the island, where a healthy yet almost invisible tourist industry offers everything from modest guesthouses to 30,000-baht-per-night bungalows.

On nearby Lauthala, Mr "Red Bull" just opened a seven-star US$18,000-per-night resort with its own international airport that services private jets. Even so, guests are required to present personal "resumes" to screen out drug barons, corrupt dictators, low-life politicians and mafia dons.

Fred lived amongst a basic yet tight-knit society on a beautiful but often inaccessible island. A visionary and intellectual in a remote outpost, his gentle leadership and far-reaching insight generated deep respect and influence. Island residents knew that when Fred spoke, he always did so with the welfare of others in mind.

The world today needs more people like Fred Hennings and perhaps nowhere more than in Phuket with its fast-moving boomtown mentality. Unfortunately, it seems Phuketians will never know the Fred Hennings style of understated leadership.

Fred died a week short of his 65th birthday in 2004, but his influence lives on. I have had the privilege of enjoying the company of many great folks, from Linus Pauling to legendary royalty. Fred Hennings with his low-key, quiet altruism and lasting vision is right in the mix.

Phuket is exploding. We need a dozen leaders like Fred, respected and practical intellectuals with soft-spoken influence based upon strong character and a true sense of altruism. It is too late for Phuket to prosper gracefully, but once we understand that people of all races and social status are part of the same family and that all our great issues from global warming to family planning, from education to realistic prosperity are intertwined, only then can we fully understand the bumpy boomtown ride on our self-created bucking bronco.

Despite pressure from Chinese, Korean, Japanese and Malaysian loggers, no tree has ever been cut down in Ravilevu, and never will. Curious exotic birds will continue fly up to investigate the reclusive big monkeys and the Vure Vure mangroves will never be destroyed by opportunistic businessmen.

Simple villagers have the awareness to protect their natural blessings, and do so with the same quite style as their teacher.

Thank you, Fred.

ACYC RACE REPORT

By Leslie Hand

AO CHALONG: Gags, snags, rain and wind highlighted a thrilling day in Race 10 of the Image Asia Ao Chalong Yacht Club (ACYC) 2008 race series on September 14.

Good wind and rainy conditions kept the crews on the nine boats participating on their toes, or, more accurately, hanging from winches, sheets, side rails, the mast...

The biggest sailing snag of the day went to catamaran SEA Property. A high-flying feat saw her achieve 80 degrees off the vertical just after the start. With a thud, she came down to sail on her two hulls and went on to win her class – albeit as the only boat in her class that day.

In other antics, Ooh La La was the word as the pink boat was spotted flying her spinnaker back to front.

The day also marked a welcome return for Tony Knight from his “near death experience” in Sydney, where he received specialist medical attention for a rare lung disorder.

Prizes donated by Day Sponsor ACYC were among the most original seen at the club. Smiles of delight widened the faces of top-place finishers rewarded with fine bottles of wine and even more bottles of Heineken, while quizzical looks and narrowed brows graced the faces of lower-place finishers for their lavish consolation prizes of Essence of Chicken, condoms, blue pills of “performance-enhancing” medication, socks and pairs of men’s underwear.

The ImageAsia Encouragement Award went to Latitude 8’s Damien Kimball, who came down from Bangkok and pitched up on Iruvia, steering with his head barely above the wheel. This reportedly had nothing to do with Iruvia’s convincing last place in Cruising Class.

Race 10 results:

Racing: 1) Katsu (Ben Copely), 2) Minx (Mick Kealy)

Cruising: 1) Nerida (Roger Diggelmann), 2) Four Winds (John Fenn) 3) Eos (Harry Usher)

Multihulls: 1) SEA Property (Peter Dyer)

Full results for the day, the progressive series results and the performance handicap can be viewed at the ACYC website: www.acyc.asiaustralia.tech.com

Race 11 of the Image Asia ACYC 2008 race series will be on September 21. All are welcome to join. For more information call Tony Knight at 081-7470074.

Phuket cricketers' hopes soaked in KL

KUALA LUMPUR: Despite some valiant efforts at the crease, the Phuket Cricket Union (PCU) tour squad suffered one loss and one match was abandoned after rain stopped play during their recent two-match tour to Kuala Lumpur.

With a diminished squad due to the protest that closed Phuket International Airport, stopping players from making their scheduled flights, PCU needed to "borrow" players from their opponents, Royal Selangor Club (RSC), to form a full team. In the true spirit of the sport, RSC were happy to oblige.

RSC captain Murali – to the PCU's delight, not the Sri Lankan international cricketer of the same name – won the toss and decided to bat. Murali also opened their batting and played a watchful knock of 35 runs before being well bowled by Andrew Beeley with the score on 83 off 13 overs.

He was well supported by Haren, who scored 25 runs before he also departed in the next over, before the heavens opened and players scattered for shelter in the clubhouse.

Despite players' wishes, the downpours continued and the pitch was waterlogged after just half-an-hour's deluge, forcing both captains to abandon play.

PCU presented tour caps to RSC captain Murali and man of the match Chris Speed, a talented 13-year-old from Kelawar, who delivered an impressive spell of medium-paced bowling, recording 0-23 off 5 overs.

In their next match the following day against Kelawar

Cricket Club (KCC), PCU were invited to bat first.

PCU opener Jason Phillips, still suffering from an upset stomach, piled on the runs, scoring a quick-fire 17, despite being dropped twice.

Fellow opening batsman Ben Webb, on loan from KCC, scored 25 runs.

Once these two were dismissed, Dill (20 runs) took up the reins with teammates chipping in at the other end, although Mark Whetton failed to produce the runs he had promised us the night before.

But it was George, also on loan from KCC, who upped the run rate at the end of the innings, smashing 31 not out and taking the PCU tally to 148 runs for 9 wickets off 25 overs.

Chris Speed, this time playing for KCC, showed great potential as an opening bowler, finishing his spell with 3 wickets for 23 runs off 5 overs.

Diwan Mydeen opened the bowling attack for PCU from the pavilion end, showing much better control than the previous day, when his first ball went skyward without reaching the batsman, instigating a shout from the slips that he should have pulled the pin out.

Continuing the bowling attack at the other of the pitch was George, who didn't disappoint by firing in a hostile spell of 5 overs taking 2 wickets for 25 runs.

However, KCC maintained the run rate throughout their innings, despite some excellent leg spin from Dill and PCU captain Richard Brown picking up a couple of wickets towards the end.

With KCC needing 11 runs off the last two overs, PCU's Graham spilled a catch at mid-off, leaving KCC to win with an over to spare.

Decor

by Pathomporn Kaenkrachang

Beachcombers craft timeless treasures from the tides

The sea has many treasures. Some rest fathoms below the surface, to where they sank hidden on storm-struck ships that never made it to their destination with their precious cargo. Others float to shore, where classic guitarist and all-round artist Suparp Wongwassana transforms them into valuable artifacts with life anew.

At Woodcraft by Suparp, a craft shop at Rawai Art Gallery, the sea's treasures come in the form of driftwood and other flotsam that the waters have willingly handed over to be turned into objects d'art.

Most people have probably walked along a beach at some point and seen a log or piece of driftwood washed up on shore that can easily be imagined set in the corner of the living room as a mysterious piece of natural decor.

For Suparp and his brother Supot, the tides have always delivered to them things that spark their creative imaginations. The beach has long been their favorite hangout, where they collect pieces of driftwood left behind by the receding tides.

"When we were kids, we just collected small pieces that we could easily carry, but as we got older, the pieces we brought back from the beach became larger and larger," said Suparp.

The creative duo often paint the things they find, including rocks found in a canal near their home in Trang.

Suparp moved to Phuket two years ago and has been scouring the beaches most days since then for things to paint, decorate and craft items to sell in his shop.

"At Nai Harn Beach, I often find pieces of coconut shell and other kinds of floating wood that have been washed ashore by the last high tide, but at Rawai Beach I find all sorts of things floating clumped up together," he said.

Pebbles into pictures, driftwood into decor. Artists Suparp and his brother Supot let nature do the talking when considering how to paint the objects they find along the beaches of Rawai and Nai Harn.

Suparp's artistic style is often humorous. Using acrylic colors, he paints funny faces on pebbles that are put in frames as well as fantasy characters and paintings of people with big smiles.

He also paints animals with human-like expressions. Whatever they are, the pieces usually highlight the things we associate with happiness.

Being artists who believe in freedom of expression, the brothers often create pieces with no particular idea of how they should be displayed.

"That's up to whoever buys a piece and where they want to put it. They might want to place it on a table or around the sink in the bathroom. Then again, it could be placed in the garden or in a small flower pot. However the pieces are used, they make unique souvenirs," said Suparp.

"Every pebble is different and treated as an individual piece. Not every piece has to be turned into a face.

When I find a nice stone, I take a long look at it first and let my imagination drift with the shape of it. Then I pick it up and start working on it," he added.

Suparp said that when it comes to making pieces of art from the driftwood they find, it is his brother who thinks of the design and he who does the wood work.

Some of the pieces the brothers have managed to haul back to the studio from the beaches, such as tree trunks and large branches, are big enough to be turned into chairs and tables.

"If we find wood that was used to make a boat, it is usually very strong and would usually be worth quite a bit on its own, so the quality of the wood is a factor in deciding the price of each item," Suparp said.

They also experiment with different types of wood for their varying colors.

He uses them together in layers to create colorful works of art mixing the likes of dark brown jackfruit wood and the light yellows of santol wood and other woody shades.

"This kind of wood inlay technique for creating collages is not a popular style in Thailand, so I think it's safe for me to say that I'm the only shop in Phuket displaying this kind of artwork," said Suparp.

Suparp and Supot's painted rocks in frames cost between 600 and 800 baht each and they sell the small pieces of wood with seascapes and comical expressions painted on them for between 200 and 500 baht each.

Handmade photo album boxes cost between 1,000 and 1,500 baht. Customers can also have products made to order.

Home of the Week

Kathu

If you're the kind of person who has the time and money to spend on 18 holes and you're an avid golfer, you'll love the idea of living within a birdy-stroke of a golf course, and can probably afford this modern three-bedroom house with a private 10-meter by 4-meter swimming pool.

But even if you're not a golfer, the views over the fairways of Loch Palm golf course in Kathu and the tranquility of the upper-end neighborhood are still attractive additions to your lifestyle, especially if you like manicured greens dotted with palm trees and ponds.

The modern two-story home is four years old and is on a 500-square-meter plot in a residential area close to the golf course but apparently far enough away from stray golf balls.

If you are generous – to the tune of 24 million baht – the current owners will leave all their furniture behind for you. But if you fancy yourself as a bit of an interior decorator, or you have a load of your own furniture, then you can pay just 21 million baht and buy an empty house ready for you to fill as you please.

Downstairs is an expansive and airy open-plan living space. The combination of wooden floors and smooth white walls with matching cabinets give this home an injection of class.

With a low wall at the front of the property, the living area has an expansive view of neatly trimmed grass and palm trees. Sliding doors open onto a patio and swimming pool at the front. The upper floor has a broad terrace with metal banisters framing glass panels so as not to obstruct the view over the golf course from inside the bedroom. The upper-floor terrace also provides shade for those lounging around by the pool below.

The home has been decorated with quality fixtures and fittings, making it ready to move in.

The fitted kitchen is naturally lit with a window in front of the sink looking into the garden and has an L-shaped black marble counter top. There's plenty of storage space in the white cupboards under the counter and fixed to the walls.

Kitchen appliances include a stove top, grill, oven, microwave and a collection of dishware and cutlery. There is also a separate laundry room equipped with a washing machine.

All three of the bedrooms have en-suite bathrooms and balconies that offer views over the golf course. The bedrooms also have wooden floors and are fitted with walk-in wardrobes.

Utilities available include electricity, Internet connection, satellite TV access, a water heater and well water.

The house is available leasehold.

Construction Update

by Nick Davies

A new low-rise to appear on the Rawai horizon

Set to begin construction in January, Tropical Condo is an eight-story residential development to be built near the Evason Phuket & Six Senses Spa in Rawai. The project is scheduled for completion before the end of 2011.

Developers and architects Prom 4 Life have drawn on their experience in developing residential projects in the Canary Islands to design the low-rise development, which is aimed at buyers who want their own piece of luxurious tropical living.

The condominium units will be in a C-shape curved around a central 800-square-meter tropical garden with a 24m saltwater swimming pool, a children's pool and a play area surrounded by sun decks and greenery to create an artificial "beach area".

The plans include a total of 59 two-bedroom units comprising nine room types to cater to a range of lifestyles and budgets. The condo units range in size from 75sqm to 147sqm.

The cheapest units have been earmarked at just over 2.9 million baht with the more exclusive units on the top floor priced between 10 and 11 million baht.

Each bedroom will have an en-suite bathroom and Theca wood (contemporary lacquered wood) floors throughout.

Fitted European-style kitchens will feature in each unit. Underground parking will be available for residents. Four units have already been bought off-plan.

On each level of the main building will be a central corridor separating the units overlooking the central gardens from those facing outward.

Outer corner units will have wrap-around terraces, while inner-corner units will have curved balconies with private Jacuzzis and space for sun loungers.

Some will have independent terraces extending from the living rooms and bedrooms; while larger units on the ground floor and sixth floor will have walled gardens with private Jacuzzis, as will the penthouse units on the top floor.

Inner-corner units on each floor will have private outdoor Jacuzzis. Residents living in units on the outer row will have views over the Evason resort's 8,000sqm gardens and residents on the fifth and sixth floors will have views of the sea.

"Our aim for Tropical Condo is to create spacious, high-quality contemporary residential

The beach will be only a footstep away for residents of this eight-story condominium in Rawai. Construction of the C-shaped Tropical Condo is set to begin in 2009. Plans include 59 residential units surrounding an artificial beach.

units that are suitable for a range of living arrangements, from couples to families and retirees," said Andres Pira, the project's managing director.

"Tropical Condo is so named because it has been designed to make the most of Phuket's tropical climate with extensive outdoor areas.

For example, with the ground-floor units, more than half of the units' total area is garden, while all of the upper-floor units have full-length balconies," added Mr Pira.

There will be eight penthouses of various sizes on the sixth floor, each with a roof garden and private outdoor Jacuzzi. Penthouse unit areas will comprise: a single 65sqm unit, a 70sqm unit, an 80sqm unit, three 90sqm units, a 100sqm unit, plus a 130sqm corner unit.

There will be a third communal swimming pool on the rooftop, as well as a fitness center, showers and a garden.

Penthouse residents will have private lift access and enjoy views of the sea.

"Construction will take 1.8

years altogether," Mr Pira said. "It is in a very good location and the range of unit sizes and prices will attract a wide range of buyers, from young to old couples to families.

"The units are available freehold. Some residents will live here all-year round and others may buy a unit as a holiday home," he added.

Gardening

By Bloomin' Bert

My father didn't really approve of what I listened to and watched. In the distant days of my youth, my dad would drone on about modern music having no tune and complain incessantly about the "rubbish" I was watching on television.

In his day of course, they had "proper" entertainment. Music that sounded as if it had been made by proper musicians (played in dance halls and the like), and proper films with proper actors, shown in cinemas.

I, of course, disagreed vehemently. Modern music was fantastic and would inevitably last forever as it was just so much better than that horrible forties stuff. Also, we had these things called televisions in our living rooms, and actually rather enjoyed the programs they showed.

What was wrong with Batman, anyway? So what if it was just a dodgy bloke in tights living alone with a young boy who wore his underwear on the outside? Those "Bam!", "Kapow!" and "Wham!" things that appeared during those daft fight scenes made absolute sense. And Thunderbirds never looked like ridiculous puppets, of course. We loved them.

Then there was Rainbow, which was so bad it was brilliant. Why did Bungle put pajamas on to go to bed but not wear anything in the daytime, by the way? I can only conclude that the producers felt that walking around stark naked all day was perfectly acceptable on children's TV in the 1970s.

I would say that I did feel very sorry for Geoffrey's kids (if he had any). Having a parent who made a complete prat of himself every day on national television must have been a total nightmare for them when facing their friends at school.

Comedy programs abounded, but one stood out in particular. Is there anyone in the western world who doesn't like Fawlty Towers? For the uninitiated, this is a British sitcom from

Holy plant, batman!

The Swiss cheese plant reaches for dark places and is, at times, just a little bit dangerous – just like a good TV show.

the seventies, which is probably one of the most hilarious, brilliant things ever to appear on television. And they made only 12 episodes in total.

I don't suppose mentioning Manual saying "Is not rat! Is filigree Siberian hamster" will mean anything unless you've seen it. How about Basil doing the "funny walk" or shouting at an elderly lady with hearing difficulties who wouldn't turn on her hearing aid because it wore the batteries down?

"Well, might I ask what you expected to see out of a Torquay hotel bedroom window? Sydney Opera House, perhaps? The hanging gardens of Babylon?

Herds of wildebeest sweeping majestically..." In one episode, the parents of a particularly obnoxious child apologized to Basil by saying "He's highly-strung", to which Basil replied under his breath "He certainly should be".

Or his immortal "Don't mention the war. I mentioned it once, but I think I got away with it". Superb stuff.

I could ramble on about Fawlty Towers all day, but I may as well get to the inevitable overstretched tenuous link to something green, I suppose. I recall an episode where Basil was chatting to the Major; they were discussing the subject of women.

Basil remarked that "they have minds like Swiss cheese". The Major responded with "What, you mean hard?" "No, full of holes", Basil replied.

Swiss cheese, surprisingly (or not), is the name of a plant that is abundant here in Phuket. It doesn't take a master's degree in botany to figure out where it got its name from. It's also known as the Mexican breadfruit, ceriman, or monstera deliciosa ("delicious monster", I believe). In Thai, it's a pru-chaluk.

Let's start with what it's not. One of this plant's alternative names is the split-leaved philodendron. Even though it looks similar to a philodendron it's actually a separate genus, so not a philodendron at all. I'm not sure that really helps much, though. The Swiss cheese plant has a thick stem that can potentially grow up to 20 meters tall, and large, leathery, glossy, heart-shaped leaves that can be anything between 25 and 90 centimeters long by 25 to 75cm wide.

On young plants the leaves start out smaller with no lobes or holes, but older plants produce lobed leaves with the characteristic holes. Those split edges and holes appear between the main lateral veins of the leaves.

The fruit that appears occasionally is up to 25cm long and 3 to 4cm in diameter, looking a bit like a green ear of corn lined with hexagonal scales.

When the plant first flowers, the fruit contains so much oxalic acid that it is poisonous, causing immediate and painful blistering and irritation, swelling, itching and loss of voice. This makes the "delicious monster" epithet somewhat bizarre. It takes a full year for the fruit to ripen, at which point it is safe to eat. Personally, I'd rather not.

This plant isn't a great fan of bright light. In fact, the young seedlings grow towards the darkest area they can find until they find a tree to latch onto, at which point they start to grow up towards the light, creeping up the tree.

There are 22 species in the genus, native to tropical rainforests from southern Mexico south to Panama, all of which are robust, strong-growing climbers, with thick sparingly branched stems. As the plant climbs, which it's eager to do, it puts out long pencil-thick aerial roots, many of which don't actually reach the ground. Even though these vertically-challenged roots may look a bit daft, don't cut them off, as they take in nutrients.

It's happiest in humus-rich, moist but well-drained soil. That compost stuff they make from coconut husks that you see in those white sacks outside every Phuket garden center is ideal.

Propagation is dead easy – either pinch a cutting from a neighbor (wear gloves, or those nasty oxalic acid crystals will get you) or air-layering works. That's the plastic-bag-of-soil-on-the-side-of-the-stem method, by the way.

If you decide to grow the Swiss cheese plant in a pot, the container needs adequate drainage holes as the plant requires a lot of water and feeding during the growing period. Before you put any soil in the pot, pile a few bits of broken pot above the drainage holes to let the water out a bit more freely.

Monstera deliciosa is a popular house plant in cooler parts of the world, typically in hotels, restaurants and offices, as well as in private homes. Even my mum has one of these things in her living room in the UK. All it needs is temperatures of 20°C to 30°C (not really a problem in Phuket), high humidity and a bit of shade. Flowering is rare when it's grown indoors, though.

I'm willing to bet that there were Swiss cheese plants in Fawlty Towers, not that Basil was a big fan of flowers. In one episode, he asked Polly, the waitress, what the smell was.

"Flowers", she replied. "I just got them from the garden."

"Well, what are you stinking the place up with those for? What's happened to the plastic ones?"

"Being ironed" was her caustic response.

Time for a visit to a certain DVD shop in Patong, I think...
