Patong Bus Crash Aftermath

Tour company free of charges

By Janpen Upatising

The bus tour company will be held responsible for compensating victims of the accident.

THE company that operated the tour bus that crashed on Patong Hill last month, killing one and injuring many others, will not have to defend itself against any criminal charges.

The news follows confirmation that the company, Tiengtham Tour, was unable to provide police investigators with basic details of the driver immediately after the accident. The company failed to provide even the driver's full name.

The driver, who fled the scene of the crash, remains at large.

He has since been named as Yongyut "Nuan" Jantip.

Police now believe Mr Yongyut is a native of Trang province, not from Phang Nga province as originally reported following passenger accounts of conversations with him.

A warrant for Mr Yongyut's arrest was issued on March 13, but the warrant had to be issued without his surname as police did not know it at the time.

Lt Pattapee Srichay, duty officer of Patong Police Station, told the Gazette, "Initially, the tour bus operator, Tiengtham Tour, did not have any personal information about Yongyut since they did not sign any employment contract with him.

"But the company later found out personal information about Yongyut by asking other bus drivers in the company," he said.

"So, we only found out Yongyut's real name and where he is from because of the tour company's efforts. It might be a bit slow, but the company is actually helping us," Lt Pattapee said.

However, the company will be held liable for providing financial assistance to the injured and to the family of the deceased, he said.

"The company must be held responsible for providing support to the relatives of the deceased and the people injured in the accident," Lt Pattapee said.

"We have received medical reports of only five of the people injured in the crash. Once we have medical reports of all the people injured in the accident, we can contact each one to discuss what compensation they should receive.

"I am not sure how long this will take to finish," Lt Pattapee said.

The tour company is not to be held responsible for the accident, he added.

"Although the company hired him to drive a company bus, reckless driving causing an accident is an individual charge," he said.

(AoT) president Serirat Prasutanond.

"I reported the disciplinary investigation team's findings to the [AoT] board members on February 24," said Flying Officer Narongchai Tanadchangsang, Deputy Director of Suvarnabhumi Airport and head of the AoT's internal investigation into the incident.

"However, the board members said at a meeting later that the results were still unclear, namely proof about some specific issues, so they decided to have my team find more information," he said.

"Following my initial investigation, I proposed that seven to eight officers be penalized, with the degree of punishment different for each official depending how much he or she was involved with the incident," he said.

The most recent working report identifies five to six officers involved, he added.

"As penalizing some officers will affect their careers, the AoT board should not want to penalize someone without solid proof," he said.

Now that he has been instructed to investigate further, Mr Narongchai said he had informed the board that another panel of officers will be formed to further investigate the specific issues identified by the board.

"I do not know whether the new investigation team has been set up yet or who will be in the team," he added.

Regarding former PIA director Prathung Sornkham, Mr Narongchai said, "We still have to wait and see whether or not he can return as airport director.

"Meanwhile, Flying Officer Passakorn Surapipith is the acting director [at Phuket Airport] until further notice from the AoT board," he added.

AoT extends probe into 'no passports' airport clearance

THE disciplinary investigation into the incident that saw Phuket Airport Director Prathung Sornkham suddenly transferred to a desk job in Bangkok in January has been extended in order to uncover "more evidence", the Gazette learned this week.

Director Prathung was transferred with immediate effect on January 19 following media reports circulated that nine Paragayan passengers departed Phuket International Airport aboard an Emirates Airline flight without passports.

The incident was confirmed to the Gazette on January 20 by Airports of Thailand

Dolphin dies despite local rescue efforts

By Pimwara Choksakulpan

EFFORTS by Phuket Marine Biological Center (PMBC) veterinarians to save a bottlenose dolphin came to a regrettable end on Friday morning.

Following five days of intensive treatment and an around-the-clock vigil, the dolphin became comatose and paralysis had set in. It finally succumbed to an as-yet-undetermined cause of death.

The distressed dolphin was found by fishermen in the polluted Klong Tha Cheen in Rassada on April 2.

The fishermen then contacted PMBC researchers.

Having encountered a pod of dolphins earlier on their trip, the fishermen believe the dolphin broke from the group and followed them home.

Once the dolphin had been transported to the PMBC facility at Cape Panwa, 14 staff members of its Marine Endangered Species Unit began their fight to keep the dolphin alive.

Veterinarian Patcharaporn Kaewmong described the efforts of her colleagues to resuscitate the stricken dolphin.

A marine biologist cradles the dolphin as PMBC staff tried their best to nurse it back to health. Photo: Yodsak Jarana

"Its muscles weakened to the point that it was unable to swim or even float enough to prevent itself from drowning - then paralysis set in. One staff member had to stay in the pool and support it at all times.

"At night we put a life jacket under it, allowing it to stay still on the water surface. We monitored its condition all day, all night," she said.

"We tried our best to keep it alive, for we held its life to be just as precious as that of a human being," she added.

New Chief Justice targets court backlog

PRAKON Rattanapit, the new Chief Justice of Phuket Provincial Court, has told the Gazette that he will make clearing 3,000-case backlog at Phuket Provincial Court his top priority.

"There are a lot of cases related with illegal drugs and land in Phuket. There are more than 3,000 remaining cases that we need to go through," he told the Gazette.

"The court here is the slowest to clear cases in Region 8. I will try to finish these remaining cases as soon as possible," he said.

Justice Prakon formally met Phuket Governor Tri Augkaradacha on April 8, two

He arrived from Koh Samui, where he served as Chief Justice there.

Samui rape suspect out on bail

AN ITALIAN man arrested on rape charges as he was leaving the country through Phuket International Airport on March 25 has been released on bail.

"The man was arrested for the alleged rape of a woman on Koh Samui. The case is still with us as the man has denied the charge. We are preparing our case to be heard in court," Samui Police duty officer Pumiwat Rodkerd told the Gazette.

"He is out on bail and I'm not sure where he is, but we are holding his passport until the case finishes," he said.

Marine Office launches water safety campaign

THE Phuket Marine Office on April 7 launched its annual water safety campaign at Rassada Harbour.

"The pier must be strong enough, life vests must be fitted to every seat and a crew member must give a safety briefing to the passengers on board before the craft departs the dock," said Tawanrat Onsira, Director-General of Marine Department.

The Marine Office holds water safety training sessions for people working in the ferry industry twice a year, Director Tawanrat explained.

After each training session, participants are tested to ensure the knowledge gained has taken hold and can be put into practice aboard commercial passenger boats.

The aim of the annual training program is to make water safety a top priority in the Gulf of Thailand and the Andaman regions, with the ultimate goal of zero marine craft accidents in Thai waters, Director Tawanrat said.

He highlighted the inherent difficulties in responding to marine accidents. "It is much easier to rescue you from a road accident than from an accident on the water. That's why preventing marine accidents is much better than trying to rescue people in them," he added.

Phuket Governor Tri Augkaradacha voiced his support for the campaign. "I believe marine accidents would seldom ever happen if we had well-maintained piers and boats and well-trained crews," he said.

Mon body remains unclaimed

THE body of a Mon woman who is believed to have died while giving birth in the hills in Wichit remains unclaimed, police have told the Gazette.

"No relatives have come to identify the body, so we will organize a funeral ceremony, awaiting someone to come forward to identify her," said Phuket City Police duty officer Lt Col Yongyut Krongmalai.

"She was not murdered. She died while delivering a baby," he confirmed.

"It seems there were complications. Her stomach was swollen and her vagina was dilated as if ready to give birth.

"I think she was about eight months pregnant. She was probably delivering prematurely. She was quite small, so that may have caused difficulties," he said.

Karon gets B40mn beachfront park

By Janpen Upatising

WORK is underway on developing eight rai around the small lake on the Karon beachfront into a public park as part of a project costing 40 million baht.

"As there is no large public park in Karon, this will be a place for local residents and tourists to enjoy exercise and relax," said Karon Mayor Tawee Thongcham.

The park, known locally as Nong Harn ["Swan Lake"], will also be a place to hold other activities, such as Songkran and Loy Krathong celebrations in the future, he added.

The design of the park had been finalized, said Mayor Tawee.

"Some parts of the park are already under construction. I expect it will be finished within three years.

"The park will include a football field, swimming pool, garden and of course the lake," he said.

The park is part of Kata-Karon Municipality's "Heaven on Earth" campaign, comprising about 10 projects aimed at preserving the local environment and attracting regular-return tourists to the area.

"One of these projects starts today: the one million postcards project. This project is funded by 700,000 baht in total donated by Krungthai, Kasikorn, CIMB and Siam Commercial banks," he said.

"The postcards will be distributed to businesses in Karon, such as restaurants, hotels, jet-ski and speedboat operators, tuk-tuk and taxi drivers and street vendors, so they can give them to their guests for free," Mayor Tawee explained.

The postcards come in two shapes. Each shows one of 10 picturesque scenes in the Kata-Karon area.

Karon Municipality will also create online videos promoting Kata and Karon Beaches to post on YouTube to attract travelers, said the mayor.

"The videos, to be made with 200,000 baht from CIMB bank, will also be posted on katakaron.com," he added.

Songkran death toll target: two

THE Interior Ministry set the "target number" of Phuket road accident deaths at two for the Songkran Festival, during which police are under orders to strictly enforce provisions in the Alcohol Control Act.

San Jantrawong, who heads the Phuket Office of the Department of Disaster Prevention and Mitigation (DDPM-Phuket), said the Interior Ministry's national Road Safety Center has designated the period from April 11 to 17 as this year's "Seven Days of Danger" road safety campaign.

The "target limit" of deaths over the period is calculated at five per cent below the number of deaths over the same period last year.

The same was applied for target numbers of road accidents requiring admittance to hospital (61) and accidents reported (57).

As in years past, an island-wide network of police checkpoints will be established in key locations to stop motorists and inspect for a variety of infractions that range from failure to wear a seat belt to drunk driving.

The locations of the 11 primary checkpoints are:

Muang District

Rassada: Thepkrasattri Road, in front of the Muang Mai building.

Chalong: Chao Fa East Road, at Talad Mai Moom Muang.

Karon: Patong-Karon Road, in front of the Ramada Resort.

Mentally ill man guards mother's body for a week

A MENTALLY ill man in Bangkok spent five days crouched over his mother's dead body in a Bangkok apartment before the foul smell alerted the landlady.

Walisa Amnuaypon, 58, said she knocked on the door but received no response. When she opened the room with her spare key she was shocked to find Somchai Saeju, 59, sitting next to the rotting corpse of his mother Sunyu Saephan, 88.

Police called to the scene, an apartment block on Rama II Road Soi 18 in Jomthong District, estimated Mrs Sunyu had been dead for five days, as the body was already in an advanced state of decomposition.

Investigation revealed that Mrs Sunyu lived in the room with Mr Somchai and his sister Muay Sawju, both of whom were reported as mentally ill.

QUEER news

Not one member of the family had jobs. Mrs Muay went out each day to beg for money from local people.

Nobody realized anything was wrong until a person in a room next door noticed the smell and told landlady Mrs Walisa.

Police believe Mrs Sunyu probably died of chronic illness and old age.

They believe that owing to their mental condition, Mrs Muay and Mr Somchai were probably unaware their mother was even dead.

Wardens make tough call on prisoners' cell phones

IF THERE were any doubt that that mobile telephone technology had completely saturated the local market, it was laid to rest with the revelation by Phuket Prison officials that persons unknown have been tossing cell phones over the walls of the facility and into the prison yard.

Phuket Prison Chief Rapin Nichanon said more than 20 mobile phones had been confiscated over the past two months, with six new arrivals on a single day on April 6, Chakri Day.

The phones were discovered that morning stashed in a box behind the craft workshop, along with a variety of mobile phone accessories.

Mr Rapin thinks that five more phones tossed into the compound on April Fool's Day were not part of a prank, but rather intended to allow inmates to conduct clandestine communications with their counterparts in free society.

"They must be up to no good, because they already have privileges to use public telephones

Mobile phones seized in a raid last year. Now guards at Phuket Prison are finding them being thrown over prison walls. Photo: Yodsak Jarana located inside the prison," he said.

There are 1,390 inmates at the prison, about 80% of whom are serving time for drug-related convictions.

Built about 100 years ago, the prisons official maximum capacity is just 800.

"We sleep asses to elbows in here," one foreign inmate told the Gazette during an interview recently.

Chief Rapin warned any parties who might be tempted to hurl a Nokia or iPhone over the prison ramparts that they would simply be wasting their money.

"We confiscate them all in the end, especially when we conduct searches of the inmates' sleeping quarters," he said.

Despite this, Chief Rapin plans to invest in technology that would block mobile phone signals on prison grounds.

He did not say what the penalty was for lobbing cellphones into the prison was, or if doing so could earn someone an extended stay on the inside.

Mother murders son with axe, poisons self

A WOMAN in Nakhon Sri Thammarat murdered her son with an axe before drinking poison, getting in her car and crashing into another vehicle.

She was rushed to hospital but died before she reached help.

Duty Officer Bunnarong Rattanakosai of Promkhirri Police Station said he received a report of the murder, at a house in Nariang Subdistrict, on the evening of April 6.

When he arrived at the house he found the body of Khamphi Kampaengkaew, 18, with a large wound to the head. Nearby was a bloody axe, three knives and a bottle of weedkiller.

Investigation revealed that the dead man's mother, Jirawan

Kampaengkaew, 41, cleaved Mr Khamphi in the head with the axe before drinking weedkiller in a bid to kill herself. She then got in her car and drove into town, where she crashed into another car.

A concerned citizen went to help Mrs Jirawan, finding her foaming at the mouth and smelling of weedkiller. The citizen then drove Mrs Jirawan to the hospital, but she died en route.

Police said Mrs Jirawan had invested in a shrimp farm and was involved in a million-baht lawsuit with a customer.

She was stressed and did not want her son to know about the problem or be held responsible. She hence decided to kill her son and herself, police said.

Police round up conscription gang

POLICE in Northeast Thailand have rounded up 13 members of a gang who offered – for a hefty fee – to help any man avoid conscription into the Thai military.

Thai men who reach the age of 21 are required to report themselves to the military during an annual conscription period.

This year the period runs from April 1 to 11, and the armed forces are looking to conscript 97,280 men for the army, navy and air force, according to news agency DPA.

But not everyone is chosen. Conscripts are selected by drawing lots, though men whose physical characteristics do not match specifications are sent home.

The scam went like this: Men who wanted to make sure they avoided conscription paid the gang 2,500 baht. The gang copied the man's ID card, replacing the photograph with the image of a different man.

The "ringer" then presented himself at the conscription round. The four men who performed this service were short, with small chest sizes that did not meet the Royal Thai Army specifications – and were always sent home.

The four "ringers" travelled all over the Northeast to attend conscription draws. After the service was complete, clients had to pay a further 18,000 baht, bringing the total fee to 20,500 baht.

On April 8, Mongkhon Surasatcha, director-general of the Department of Provincial Administration, Buri Ram Governor Thani Samatkit and Buri Ram Police Commander Sombat Khongphibun announced arrests of the four suspects at a press conference at Pradonchai Police Station in Buri Ram.

The four confessed to police to being paid 1,500 baht to present themselves at conscription rounds instead of other men.

Buri Ram Police contacted their counterparts in Udon Thani, who expanded the investigation, rounding up 13 suspects.

The gang members, from 19 years old to 58, were presented to the media together with evidence including 33 fake ID cards and 32 sets of SorDor 43 and SorDor 32 conscription forms.

Lt Gen Somphong Khongphetsak, commander of Region 4 police, said the suspects had been hired to run the operation by a 61-year-old Army colonel.

Lt Gen Somphong said a summons had been issued for the man behind the operation.

'Monster' haul of lizards

THAILAND made its "largest ever haul" of smuggled monitor lizards after more than 2,000 of the creatures were discovered in a convoy of pickup trucks in Prachuap Khiri Khan province, according to AFP.

The live Bengal monitors – which are a protected species related to the Komodo dragon – were believed to be heading for Chinese kitchens.

Officials estimated the value of the reptiles at 1.8 million baht. The meter-long lizards, which were discovered on April 7, were tied and stuffed into plastic bags.

"They are from Malaysia and then are transported through southern Thailand and northeastern Laos to China for eating," said Seree Thaijongrak, head of the customs investigation and suppression bureau.

"We knew there was a monitor lizard racket... this time it's the largest seizure ever," he said.

Tourist blockade plain stupidity

The blockade at the Deep Sea Port by the taxi, van and tuk-tuk drivers was plain stupidity. The tours were booked on board and the numbers of buses and vans had to be determined before the ship arrived.

Most tourists do not speak Thai and will follow the ship's authorized tours for safety reasons.

Should anything go wrong, the responsibility will be on the ship and the tour agents, so that is what the tourists want.

Would taxi or van drivers accept that responsibility?

Making the most of the valuable rain

Phuket Gazette

THE start of 2011 has been rainy indeed, but Phuket has fortunately been spared the kind of flooding and landslides that have devastated parts of neighboring provinces like Krabi and Nakhon Sri Thammarat.

As this edition went to print, year-to-date rainfall at the Meteorological Department's monitoring station on Thalang Road in Phuket Town stood at 472 millimeters, while 659mm had been recorded at the station near Phuket Airport.

The long-term forecast was for continued scattered showers across the island.

Historical rainfall data for the 30-year period from 1971-2000 shows that the two stations averaged of 308mm and 247mm, respectively, over the first four months of those years.

With roughly double these year-to-date amounts by the end of March 2011, we are indeed experiencing an unusually wet start of the year, but this is something we should be rejoicing rather than complaining about – as many island residents have been wont to do lately.

Phuket is a place where people tend to come and go very quickly, but at least a small segment of readers will be able to remember back to the awful drought Phuket and other parts of the South suffered in the first half of 2005.

Coming just after the December 2004 tsunami poisoned surface and groundwater supplies well inland, there were only trace rainfall amounts during the following three months. The annual monsoon was very slow in coming, leaving the entire South completely parched in early April that year.

The only thing that prevented that drought from having a devastating impact on the tourism industry that year was the fact that the high season had already been wiped out by the tsunami and demand for water was very low.

Fast forward to the present and we see verdant hillsides, at least in areas untouched by "development" and encroachment, record numbers of tourists, and copious amounts of water – enough for us to mindlessly douse ourselves with as many have been doing in recent days.

Although visiting foreign tourists may justifiably complain about poor beach weather, most residents on the island simply have little reason to complain.

Happiest of all will be officials at the Irrigation Department office at Bang Wad Reservoir, which is filled nearly to the brim at a time of year when it is normally being replenished with low-quality water from tin mines and golf courses.

This is always a good event. As most of the supporters have their own transport, a lot of tuk-tuks are redundant for the event.

Also, as they have big bikes they will probably not feel the need for speed and so jet-ski business may be quiet.

As much as I find it disturbing to see a 70-year-old guy with a 19-year-old girl anywhere, it is absurd that any government would make such a move. This is a clear violation of human rights, in line with charters and laws that are in effect, which the offending country signed.

Sanctions against the country should be sought until the situation is rectified.

Raw sewage really does flow downhill

On the road joining Baan Rawai and Baan Nai Harn, raw sewage runs in the street both ways from the top of the hill.

It stinks and is a health hazard as the sewage is sprayed into the air by passing cars.

Motorbikes have to drive through it. Last time I complained I was assured the problem would be taken care of, but the only thing that happened was that some vegetation was cleaned out of the ditches. Evidently there are no septic tanks as the sewage runs directly into the street. What's to be done?

*William Smith
Baan Rawai, Nai Harn*

Khanaruk Khobwach of Rawai Municipality Public Health and Environment Division replies:

This case sounds very similar. Last month, we received a very similar complaint, but I'm not sure if it is the same location or not.

Send us your queries and we'll ask the right people to respond to them.

Submit your issue at

www.PhuketGazette.net/IssuesAnswers

The previous complaint involved a restaurant at the top of a hill. We issued a warning and gave them seven days to fix the problem, but they failed to comply.

We then issued a clear written order to install a septic tank, but it seems they misunderstood and installed a peculiar system of drains instead, which only made the problem worse.

Now sewage runs in the drains along the street, giving off a foul smell.

We are currently in the process of explaining to them how to install a septic tank.

If they fail to comply after this, we will issue an order to have them close until it is done.

Blinded by the light

The very tall stadium-strength lights by Bang Ma Ruan lake are very bright. I live hundreds of meters away and I am blinded by them and cannot enjoy an evening outside anymore. Why are they on all night?

*Blinded by The Light
Bang Jo*

Thamrong Tantiwiratkul, president of the Srisoonthorn Tambon Administration Organization (OrBorTor), replies:

The park was developed for villagers to exercise and enjoy social activities, so it is open and the lights are on until 9:30pm. This also deters troublemakers from congregating using the area.

The lights are automatically lit daily from 4am to 6am and 6pm to 9:30pm.

If you see the lights on all night, there may be a malfunction. If that is the case, call us at 076-617 803 and we will fix them as soon as possible. If the lights are too bright, we will adjust them.

The trouble with keeping dolphins

FIRST PERSON

THE greatest suffering for dolphins living in captivity is caused by the spacial limitations. Free dolphins dive to depths of up to 500 meters and swim distances of up to 80km a day.

Many species spend more than 80 per cent of their time far below the surface and are always in motion, even when they rest.

Dolphins maintain complex social structures and communicate with each other. In captivity, they are removed from their natural social environment.

Their need to partner with their species cannot be fulfilled and they are sentenced to life imprisonment in an artificially mismatched group.

Dolphins in captivity cannot live "normal" lives – they have no way to live out their instincts and needs.

Everything in captivity is unnatural – dolphins are forced to live in chemically-treated water, which can be extremely harmful to eyes and skin; they get dead fish as food and training rewards.

The dead fish are not always visible to the dolphin, in the beginning, as food – it will actually avoid them.

The "forced" feeding of captured young dolphins is brutal and performed with a gastric tube.

Imprisonment of dolphins in "dolphinariums" changes the behavior of the animals. Among the many sufferings of dolphins sepa-

Wilfried Niedermayr, 52, is a self-described "passionate underwater photographer" from Switzerland. His wife and three adult children are all certified divers. rated from their natural habitat are: forced idleness, boredom, irritation, submission to humans, loss of social fabric, forced drug consumption, birth control and foreign or unnatural diet.

Their sonar becomes useless as it just bounces off the bare concrete walls. There is no sunlight and no "change of seasons" to provide some variation. Straight swimming is no longer possible. Noise, smells, sounds and the proximity of strange animals and humans are all unnatural.

For dolphinarim owners, these animals are a lucrative business. Their smiles attract viewers while the facilities convey the impression of a perfect world.

Behind the scenes of the seemingly playful performances, the dolphins are subject to suffering, degradation and sometimes even deadly fights among each other.

Dolphins who survive the brutal capture and sometimes very long transport are expected to live in narrow, barren concrete pools.

In Switzerland alone more than 30 dolphins died in 30 years at one children's zoo. The dolphinarium was eventually closed following pressure from activist groups.

The movie The Cove by Rick O'Barry shows exactly how thousands of dolphins are every year driven into a tiny cove in Japan where the youngest ones are separated from their group, caught and sold to dolphinariums all over the world. The others are meaninglessly slaughtered.

Visitors to dolphinariums do not see any of this. Therefore I strongly suggest that Phuket not build a dolphinarium [Gazette, Expat seeks support for B900mn aquarium, April 9].

Many environmental groups and animal rights activists worldwide today are fighting plans to build new dolphinariums, and more and more people are supporting them with the help of the internet, such as through Facebook.

Some foreigners on Phuket simply do not appreciate the culture gap.

Beauty and the foreign beast

Island View

By Bonny Reynolds

Do you have an opinion to voice? Email Editor@PhuketGazette.net

THE debate in the Phuket Gazette regarding semi-clad foreigners on the beaches of Phuket gave me pause while relaxing on Lay Phan Beach recently.

Although argument rages over the imbalance of fairness towards women's rights to emulate their male counterparts by removing their tops – the fact remains that it is illegal to do so in Thailand.

Female foreign visitors to Thailand may be unaware of this law and most will immediately rectify their state of undress when it is pointed out to them.

However, there is no excuse for long-term visitors to this island. Disregarding the sensitivities of Thai culture is to disgrace oneself and one's nation.

Back in their countries of origin, foreigners habitually pick fault with foreign visitors who impose their culture. And yet, when these travelers visit another country they flagrantly ignore laws and defend their attitudes with inane and hypocritical arguments, or as in cases of females baring their chests – the sexist card is played.

The incident I witnessed on Lay Phan Beach had a triple whammy of foreign arrogance to inspire this article.

First, a young French woman flung a plastic bucket back at a three-year-old Thai boy who had accidentally thrown the beach toy in her direction. Second, she was topless. Third, she claimed she wasn't a tourist once the boy's father had remonstrated with the semi-clad female to cover up, adding that Thailand did not need tourists of her ilk.

Attempting to hurt a child in any case is thoroughly wrong and fortunately the child was not physically hurt. Being half-naked is, as noted above, illegal. To exacerbate the child abuse and her lack of attire, she showed why foreigners can sometimes be much disliked by Thai people.

Rather than being apologetic for her actions, she focused her retort on the ignominy of being called a tourist. If, as claimed, she wasn't a tourist then, she should be aware of the law, but clearly decided that topless child accosting was a loophole in Thai law that only long-term residents can benefit from.

How can long-term residents such as myself and many others who have families and an element of respect from Thai people expect to build on our hard work when these long-term tourists, who should know better, are allowed to exploit the law?

I have lived here for five years and I consider myself a tourist. Yes, I work here but the only difference between my visa and a tourist visa is that I can be employed. The laws of Thailand still apply whether a foreigner is here for two weeks or two years.

If anyone deserves forced repatriation from Thailand, surely arrogant foreigners with no respect for Thai law and culture are near the top of the list.

How do we kill the coconut beetles?

Has anyone found a way to get rid of the bugs that kill coconut trees yet?

Horst Lakits
Chalong

Pa-yao Pinno, an officer at the Phuket Provincial Agriculture Office, replies:

There are many kinds of pests that damage coconut trees. You need to know which kind is causing damage to your trees in order for you to use the correct treatment to get rid of them.

To the best of our knowledge, there are only two types of pests damaging coconut trees in Phuket and neighboring provinces.

The first is the coconut hispine beetle (Brontispa longissima). To counter this pest we use a biological agent. We release an insect called Asecodes hispinarum at the top of the coconut tree.

The Asecodes will eat all the coconut hispine beetles on the tree until there are none left, and then it will die.

The Metarhizium anisopliae fungus is capable of killing more than 200 insect species, including cockroaches. Photo: plosgenetics.org

The second type of pest damaging coconut trees in Phuket is the Rhinoceros beetle.

We get rid of this one by taking grains of rice covered with the fungus Meterhizium anisopliac and spreading them through a pile of fertilizer on your coconut plantation.

When the beetle lays its eggs in the fertilizer pile, the fungus kills the eggs and the beetles die out.

You cannot buy Asecodes hispinarum or Meterhizium anisopliac at normal agricultural stores.

You have to ask for these from the Surat Thani Pest Management Center, or you can contact the Phuket Provincial Agricultural Office and we will arrange it for you.

Call our office directly at 076-216565 and ask to speak with me.

Twin city trade to grow

By Pimwara Choksakulpan

A DELEGATION from Yantai City in Shandong province, China, met Phuket Vice Governor Weerawat Janpen at Provincial Hall recently to discuss commercial exchange in fruit, local products and tourism.

Huang Yewen, Deputy Director of the China (Yantai) Asia-Pacific World Trade Center, opened the talks by inviting Phuket officials to attend the 12th International Fruit Vegetable Food Exposition to be held in Yantai on September 23-26.

Attracting exhibitors and visitors worldwide, the exposition is held annually to promote and exchange international technology and co-operation in fresh produce-related industries.

Representatives from 10 industries in Thailand attended the event last year, said Mr Huang.

Phuket once presented in the expo in year 2000, he added.

"I would like Phuket to present fresh Phuket fruit at the fair because normally there is only dried fruit from Thailand on sale in Yantai," he explained.

Mr Huang also proposed establishing a Thai-fruit center in Yantai as a distribution center for neighboring areas in Shandong, on the Chinese northeastern peninsula.

The center would also be a focal point of fruits traded between the two cities, which are already "twinned" with each other.

"Yantai is famous for fruit cultivation, especially grapes, apples, peaches and cherries," said Mr Huang, naming four fruits popular with Westerners but relatively hard to find at Phuket markets.

"It would be a good chance to have Yantai fruit on sale here and Phuket fruit on sale in Yantai," he said.

With the number of tourists coming to Phuket continuing to spiral upward, the demand for such fruits would only rise, he added.

In terms of tourism, Mr Huang pointed out that Yantai was near many tourist attractions popular with Thai people, such as Tai Shan Mountain and Qufu city.

According to Chinese government websites, Tai Shan Mountain is regarded as preeminent among China's Five Sacred Mountains, with 72 Chinese emperors of various dynasties making pilgrimages to the mountain for sacrificial and other ceremonial purposes.

Qufu City is renowned as the birthplace of Confucius.

Vice Governor Weerawat said he appreciated the visit and that he would bring the proposals to the attention of top officials.

In closing the meeting, Wannaprapa Suksomboon, deputy director of the southern regional Tourism Authority of Thailand (TAT) office in Phuket, pointed out that in developing tourism, launching direct flights between the two cities would be a top priority.

"In the first three months of this year, 131,109 tourists from mainland China visited Phuket. Most were from Shanghai and Beijing because there are direct flights operating between those two cities," she said.

Feeling a touch of d j vu?

The financial first half of this year bears some striking similarities to the year of the financial meltdown in 2008.

RECENTLY MBMG discussed “d j Vu” and whether this investing environment has a first half of 2008 feeling all over again? Today we have inflation fears in emerging markets, raging commodity prices and equity markets shrugging off so called “black swan” events.

In the first six months of 2008 the economy was remarkably upbeat on growth, Vietnam had surging double digit inflation, other emerging markets were worried about inflation. Bear Stearns had to be bailed out “a black swan” and the oil price moved from US$100 to US$150 by June. The conclusion on oil is below, but this has much bigger ramifications for our tactical asset allocation over coming months.

As Scott Campbell says, “In 2008, oil passing US$125 acted as a choking point for equities. Morgan Stanley says the threshold could be higher in this cycle and points out the oil price spike in 2008 acted as a drag on equities only once oil rose above US$120. As oil crossed the US$100 mark in February 2008, non-financial equities continued to rise in tandem with the oil price, up until the middle of May when the correlation reversed.”

“The European non-financial index peaked on May 19 [2008], at which point oil was at US$123. Oil rose a further 18 per cent through to mid-July, during which non-financial equities fell 17 per cent. Arguably, the point at which higher oil prices act as a significant drag on equity prices could be higher than in 2008.”

Island Investor
By Graham Macdonald

No doubt this time is different and a lot depends on how long oil stays high for, but at some point markets are going to get pretty scared by what they are seeing.

According to our sources, each US$10 increase in oil prices reduced OECD growth by 0.1 per cent – 0.5 per cent (depending on who you read), so with growth still fuelled (excuse the pun) by quantitative easing and fiscal spending, higher oil prices are certainly not good news for growth. Couple this with the ECB that seems hell bent on raising interest rates and one gets a horrible d j vu feeling to 2008.

We have already touched on commodities, but while many of them are, to say the least, more than a tad volatile there is still a good argument for gold. A couple of years ago, Warren Buffet was asked if central banks around the world would sell off the US Treasury holdings they owned. Buffet said this was very unlikely as they would have to convert them into an alternative currency and, over the long run, nothing was better than the US Dollar.

NEW YORK: Traders work in the crude oil options pit at the New York Mercantile Exchange on March 22. Oil prices increased to US$104 per barrel on the day as the unrest in Libya continued to drive prices higher. Photo: AFP

However, is this the case and is it true? I do not believe it is. More than a few countries are building up their gold reserves – with China leading the way. In 2004, the Chinese had 600 metric tons of gold. A couple of years ago this had grown to over 1,050.

It is not a secret that the central bank wants to increase this. It is also interesting to note that China has quietly been selling its US Treasuries recently.

As the Spanish philosopher Santayana once said, “Those who do not remember history are condemned to repeat it”.

As the Spanish philosopher Santayana once said, ‘Those who do not remember history are condemned to repeat it’.

Without doubt, there have been times when alternatives to gold have come to the fore, for instance the Greenback in the American Civil War and Roosevelt rejecting gold in the 1930s both come to mind. However, gold has been around for thousands of years and is valued more than ever – remember it has risen dramatically over the last couple of months. Its time is coming again and we do not think it unlikely that by the end of next year gold will be at a minimum of US$2,000 per ounce.

In conclusion, we were overweight risk assets from mid last year until recently.

We are currently around benchmark weightings, so neutral risk assets, and watching every day for the flashing red lights.

In no way does this mean we are forecasting a H2 like 2008 and notwithstanding equity valuations and a normally positive Year 3 US Presidential cycle, if certain events and policy decisions occur, the second half of this year will be difficult to say the least.

Cooper's chance to shine

Film

By Scott Phillips

Limitless

Director: Neil Burger
Starring: Bradley Cooper, Robert DeNiro, Abbie Cornish
Genre: Thriller
Gazette Rating: 3/5

ATTENTION all hippies and dead-beats with nappy hair and tattered clothing: slick it back, shave up and put on a nice suit, and you will look infinitely more intelligent. The air of intelligence and the art of deception are often one in the same.

Though the filmmakers may not have intended it to be, this is one of the subtle messages behind Limitless, a new thriller that focuses on a man who finds a substance that allows him to use his brain to its full capacity.

We have all been told we only use 20 per cent of our brains; Limitless presents audiences with a story in which a clear little pill unleashes the other 80.

It's rather fun to poke at the implications that the film suggests come with higher intelligence. Albert Einstein would have been disappointed. That signature "just been electrocuted" hair and raggedy appearance? Gone. Apparently, smart people only wear US$3,000 suits, which intelligent people might argue is rather stupid if your day is likely to involve several violent encounters with super-genius gangbangers. Vanity, it seems, is not the refuge of retards.

Hangover star Bradley Cooper leads the film in another breakout role to help solidify his status as one of Hollywood's new acting elite. He looks the part of Eddie Mora very well – believable as a bum who depends on his girlfriend's credit card to pay his bills, but cleans up very easily. When he takes his first dose of the mysterious brain pill (known as NZT) Cooper pulls off the personality of someone who you wouldn't mind being the smartest guy in the room. In short, he's confident and amusing without coming off as condescending.

Unfortunately there is no such pill to cure the film of its shortcomings.

Yet there is a major conflict for Eddie. Rather than exploring some of the "nerdier" sides of super intelligence, such as finding a cure for cancer or solving the mysterious riddles of the universe, he opts to hit Wall Street and smooth talk women into bed.

No complaints here, but if you were looking for an intellectual exploration of the power of the human mind, this isn't it. Yet it is still fun, albeit somewhat ironic, to turn off your brain and watch Eddie enjoy the fruits of his newfound super intelligence.

The drug apparently gives Eddie a four-digit IQ. "It works better if you're already smart", he's told. Does that mean that if Eddie takes NZT and ends up in a mess of Wall Street crooks, gangsters and loan sharks, that he was stupid before taking it? That's for you to decide.

Director Neil Burger earns some serious style points with the film. Considering he got his start in show-biz by directing shows for MTV, this may come as no surprise.

The cinematography and visual effects are trippy and thematic. Movie buffs and acid addicts will be pleased at the variety of visual elements used to convey the experience of a neuronal high.

There are special effects literally falling off the walls – stock quotes that suddenly appear in Eddie's apartment so he can use them to make his first million. Bright hues abound when Eddie is on his NZT, and the world around him does indeed look different. It's a clever approach to visualizing the change the drug makes for Eddie.

Stylish though it may be, the screenplay still lacks the punch that this kind of plot could pack. The discovery of super-charged intelligence would certainly be an exciting one, but the film fails to make Eddie's experience a vicarious one. We are simply spectators watching Eddie on a series of power trips. Sure, Eddie suddenly becomes a super-genius who comes up with fail-safe algorithms for Wall Street, but what does it feel like to instantly become so brilliant? This feeling is never conveyed, and that is easily the film's greatest shortcoming.

Still, for a psychotropic thriller and a stellar cast that includes Robert DeNiro and Abbie Cornish, Limitless will deliver the goods.

Just don't expect to leave the theater feeling enlightened.

Duane Lennie

DUANE Lennie is a media specialist who sold his thriving marketing and public relations company in Vancouver, Canada, in 2001 to take over operations at KohLanta.net, which he eventually bought.

"I had been working in journalism, strategic market planning, PR and media relations for almost 20 years and was ready for a change. I first visited Thailand in 2000, with a month on Phuket and a month on Koh Samui, and was very impressed with the potential to develop media and marketing projects."

Currently, Duane is the Director for Mango Nation Marketing Communications, a full service advertising and PR consultancy specializing in marketing Southeast Asia's finest luxury property and resort developments.

He started working at a very young age as equipment assistant with the BC Lions football team. He attributes his early exposure to media and events to his mother's husband who was PR Director for the Vancouver Canucks hockey team. While in school, he was named Canada's Newspaper Editor of the Year at Terry Fox Senior Secondary School. He went on to complete the Advertising and Public Relations Program at Grant McEwen Community College.

launches. He worked on a Willy Nelson tour and was hired by Vancouver's Expo 86 to handle the "Legends of Rock 'n' Roll" series.

He founded Mix Communications in 1987 and for the next 13 years handled the marketing for some of Canada's highest profile companies and events. His clients included the Pacific National Exhibition, Canadian National Ski Championships, World Wrestling Federation and the Stein Valley Music Festival.

Duane also handled promotions and tour management for performers such as Jerry Lee Lewis, Chuck Berry, the Beach Boys, Ray Charles, Bill Cosby and Bob Hope. By 2001 when he closed his company, he estimates his work had helped to attract more than two million patrons to his clients' attractions.

"I was fortunate to have work that fed my personal interests. As a writer, I was interested in how journalism could 'spin' stories and create impact."

When Duane arrived to live on Koh Lanta in 2001, he began working with KohLanta.net. The business did hotel and dive bookings. He also began looking at the potential for property on the island.

After the tsunami, he became a fundraiser to rebuild local fishing boats. He also leased a heritage shophouse in Lanta Old Town, which had served as an opium den for the island's Chinese tin miners. He restored the building and created his own guest house and restaurant.

In 2007, he joined Phuket's INDIGO real estate as Director of Marketing and Communications, where he was instrumental in placing media stories in the New York Times, Robb Report, Architectural Digest and Luxury Property magazine.

"During my time at INDIGO, the firm was named Best Thailand Agent at the Thailand Property Awards. My job was to ensure the company and its offerings were mass exposed through an integrated marketing campaign and an innovative co-operating brokers program."

Most recently, he has been doing his own projects in promoting the Istana and Mandala condominiums. He divides his time between Phuket and Lanta where he recently produced the Mango House Festival, inviting international DJs to perform as part of the Lanta Old Town Festival.

Waging war on Songkran style

By Julia Dennis

WATER. Flour. Rain. Fashion. It's Songkran, and the Thai New Year's Day water fight that consumes the nation presents a daunting fashion task. With wardrobe malfunctions around every corner, it's nearly impossible to keep an eye on fashion while being chased by complete strangers with icy cold buckets of water.

Fear not! A handful of smart outfit decisions can save style in the midst of chaos, and apply as much for Songkran as for rainy season.

Of course, at the end of the day Songkran is a celebration of joy and goodwill no matter what you wear, but it doesn't hurt to look good while soaking fellow revelers and patting flour on their cheeks.

Wild 'n' Out Basics

Anti-destructibility is of the utmost importance for the Songkran look. Everything will get absolutely soaked, but it better not fall off – unless you want it to. Tight-fitting, quick-dry fabrics over a bathing suit are crucial to stay in the action without losing your drawers.

Avoid baggy t-shirts or heavy-when-wet denim. Ladies can take advantage of the myriad shorts and one-piece jumpers in trend now, inspired from the 70s to add retro chic, or mix crazy prints together for the youthful club-kid look.

Bare in mind this is a family event, not a wet t-shirt contest, so save your whites for the Vegetarian Festival.

SPLASH! Nicola Walters and Jennifer Kathrens are Songkran ready!

Ponchos and plastic overcoats can spell fashion disaster, but there's nothing like a well-placed belt to make water protection look smoking hot. Wrap a stretchy belt around your true waist (not the hips) to define your shape and keep outerwear in place throughout the deluges, especially when riding a motorbike. The extra insulating layer of warmth from the plastic cover will also keep you in the Songkran spirit longer, even if the sun refuses to shine on your celebrations.

Outerwear

I love flip-flops, we all do. But on Songkran day there is no quicker way to end festivities early than to slip on a wet, floury tile while trying to hose your best friend with a super soaker. Flip-flops are not the answer. Converse sneakers or rain boots like these DIY string-ups (pictured) will help keep you on your feet. Transform a pair of simple worker boots with spray paints and laces for custom footwear that turn wet days to stylish days. Just remember to add some slits on the sides of the foot for drainage – and douse away!

Below the Ankles

Wet-cessories

Often all you need to turn a look from dull to daring is the appropriate accessory. A sky-blue visor to keep sun off the nose and water out of the eyes finishes the Songkran club-kid look. A simple umbrella also adds a classy touch to even the biggest of misfits, with the added bonus of deflecting water. Above all, sealed dry bags are not just for divers anymore, they are a girl's best friend during the big wet. From hot pink to turquoise, dry bags come in a variety of colors and sizes to help you stand out in the crowd.

ARIES (March 21-April 20):

Many Arians will be feeling washed out after recent holiday fun. Allow yourself some quiet time this week in order to regroup. The stars suggest that inspiration will strike towards the end of this month and a new business venture or career direction is highlighted to make your summer a busy time. Those with a birthday in the days ahead are expected to have more control over their lives in the coming year.

TAURUS (April 21-May 21):

A win-win situation is forecast to put a smile on Taureans' faces this week. After ups and downs during the first half of April, your luck is set to increase during the coming two weeks. Where personal relationships are concerned, there are signs that a misunderstanding with a water sign will be resolved this weekend. Best days for romance are Sunday and Monday.

GEMINI (May 22-June 21):

The stars encourage Geminis to look on the bright side this week. Delays at work or in business could cause frustration, but you are advised to focus on progress that has already been made. A fire sign friend could ask for help this weekend – be clear about how far you are prepared to put yourself out. Romance with a new partner is well-starred, but those in a committed relationship could have some explaining to do.

CANCER (June 22-July 23):

Cancerians who have suspected that something was going on behind their backs could receive confirmation that their intuitions were right. The stars predict that another water sign has important information to reveal early next week. Your luck in love continues to be strong – those who have become attracted to an earth sign should learn that their interest is returned.

LEO (July 24-August 22):

Finances are forecast to be a source of concern for Leos during the second half of April. The stars suggest that you take a realistic look at your outgoings as there may be ways to cut corners that you haven't considered. Work should start to bring more satisfaction, particularly for those who have been considering a change – an air sign can point you in the right direction this weekend.

VIRGO (August 23-September 23):

Virgoans are advised not to push their luck in work related negotiations. Asking for the moon could result in having nothing except your pride. Where romance is concerned, too much introspection could lead you to the wrong conclusion. The stars suggest that an honest conversation this weekend will relieve your worries. Those who are ready for romance should enjoy a flirtatious encounter with another earth sign this weekend.

LIBRA (September 24-October 23):

Progress at work is forecast to be favorable for Librans. The stars are ready to support your determination to climb the career ladder this year. Flexibility will be your guarantee of success, so be prepared to compromise. Your romantic outlook improves, with focus on a relationship with another air sign becoming more relaxed.

SCORPIO (October 24-November 22):

Many of those born under the sign of Scorpio could be feeling under par this week and the stars advise cutting back on commitments. Where love is concerned, it's best not to act on impulse at the moment. There are signs that you may be hoping for a romantic response from a fire sign who only wants a platonic relationship.

SAGITTARIUS (November 23-December 21):

Your enthusiasm for spring cleaning and decorating may not be shared by other family members. Sagittarians should not try to force others' involvement as this will lead to disagreements. The stars suggest that next month will be a more auspicious time for improvements to your living situation. In the meantime, put excess energy to productive use by catching up on personal administration and tying up loose ends at work.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 20):

A restless mood is forecast to affect Capricorns' work and personal relationships this week. The stars advise putting important discussions and agreements on hold until the end of this month. If this is not possible, Wednesday would be the most auspicious day for communications. In the realm of romance, an air sign is ready to show their interest, but another earth sign can't make up their mind.

AQUARIUS (January 21-February 19):

Aquarians might be feeling less inclined to socialize this week. However, the stars indicate that your networking skills will be heightened until the end of April and getting out and about could lead to worthwhile new contacts. Romance is affected by cloudy astral conditions – wearing your heart on your sleeve could have the wrong effect on an earth sign you would like to impress. Play it cool for more positive results.

PISCES (February 20-March 20):

At least one of your hidden talents is forecast to come to the surface this week. An air sign could hold the key to helping you put this skill to constructive use, but it could involve radical changes in your life. Those Pisceans who are not ready to leave their comfort zone may have a change of heart as summer draws nearer. An earth sign friend can give sensible advice this weekend.

Land prices survive floods and tsunamis

FLOODING and natural disasters cause the public to worry about the future of Phuket's real estate market, but studies conducted by the Agency for Real Estate Affairs (AREA) of Thailand indicate that property prices on the island remained strong even in the immediate aftermath of the tsunami disaster.

Land valuation surveys were conducted during the month of July, 2004, about five months prior to the tsunami, and again in May, 2005, about five months after the tsunami.

The results showed that land prices along Phuket's west coast, even in areas directly affected by the tsunami, remained the same. Property along the east coast, which was

Pre and post 2004 tsunami prices in the west coast remained unchanged:

Mai Khao Beach: B5 million
 Nai Yang Beach: B6mn
 Nai Thon Beach: B7mn
 Bang Tao Beach: B7.5mn
 Kamala Beach: B9mn
 Patong Beach: B40mn
 Karon Beach: B20mn
 Kata Beach: B10mn

less affected, actually saw a surge in real estate prices. It is believed these increases re-

Statistics show that land prices in Patong were unaffected by the tsunami.

Average prices on the east coast increased:

Ao Maphrao: B2mn-B2.2mn
 Ao Por: B3mn-B3.5mn
 Ao Sapam: B3mn-B3.3mn
 Ao Chalong: B5mn-B5.5mn
 Rawai Beach: B5mn-5.5mn

flect the belief that any future tsunami inundations would have a less severe impact along the east coast, AREA researchers wrote.

Since then, surveys conducted during March, 2007, 2008, and August 2009, show that land prices have continued to increase rapidly; since 2005, real estate prices in 2011 have increased up to 60 per cent at Mai Khao beach, 50 per cent at Bang Tao beach, 70 per cent at Kamala beach, and up to 100 per cent rise at Patong Beach, of which undeveloped beach front land is valued at more than 80 million baht per rai.

These land price surveys suggest that even the deadliest natural disaster in recorded history, did not have a negative affect on land values in Phuket, including areas with extensive tsunami damage.

The public should therefore not worry about long-term effects natural disasters may have on real estate values, as any effect would likely only be in the short term, AREA analysts concluded.

In brief... New Patong condo taps Thais

ARGUABLY the two busiest property markets on the island are In-land-focused domestic developments and lower-price Patong condominiums.

In the latter, an emerging trend are larger number of Thai buyers flocking in to attractive pricing points. An example is the new art@Patong near to Jungceylon.

With sizes ranging from 27 square meter studios up to 107sqm three bedroom units, pricing starts at only 2.26 million baht.

A launch special also includes a free iPad for each purchase.

Twinpalms to launch 'Flame' soon

ONE OF the island's most popular hospitality innovators Twinpalms is set to open the garden rotisserie outlet, Flame, this June.

Located next to the popular Bake, near the entrance to Laguna in Surin, the new outlet will offer wood-fired pizza, roast chicken, pork and beef dishes, and a wide variety of kebabs.

Open from 10am to 10pm daily, home delivery and take-away are also on offer. Leave it to Olivier Gibuad to breathe some fresh air into Phuket's food scene.

Waking up to Bali

THE FAMILIAR FOE: Bali and Phuket still jostle for superiority in terms of tourism, development and property because both bear striking similarities in the markets they attract.

WAKING up on a dark rainy day in Phuket to a badly timed alarm clock could easily be compared to receiving the jolt delivered through defibrillator paddles.

The fog lifted, only to be followed by a wave of boozier remorse over why I thought I needed those four extra drinks for the road the night before and why I didn't simply take a sleeping pill when the sun went down.

I headed to the airport in the pitch black before dawn, on my way to catch an insanely scheduled AirAsia direct flight to the isle of sleep – Bali.

All looked good until I arrived at the terminal at precisely the same time as four "Transformer"-sized tour buses carrying herds of package tourists heading home on their charter flights.

The resulting carnage, limbs ripped from torsos and kicks to the head to slow-moving elderly women and children is far too horrific to recount here. Let's just say I managed to run the gauntlet and find my way to the airplane minutes before takeoff.

My mission differed from those other passengers reclining their seats to pin down those seated behind them in what wrestlers call the "cobra grip of death". Mine was a mission of market research into the parallel universe of property in Asia's other great resort destination.

Filled with purpose and a slight buzz from four cups of very bad Nescafe 3-in-1 (aka sugar and some other substance resembling low-grade crank), I hit the immigration and visa-on-arrival lines itching to go.

Surprisingly, the dialogue with government officials was pleasant. There were multiple exchanges of polite hellos and thank yous and even an unexpected, "Welcome to Bali." This was unlike in Phuket, where I am so used to having my passport thrown at me with a grunt and the turn of a head signaling that I must depart the line immediately.

After clearing entry, I made my way throughout the upscale tourist areas of Ubud, Nusa Dua, Legian/Seminyak, Jimbaran and Bukid, where construction was everywhere, propelled forward at fever pitch.

Branded-hospitality offerings screamed out at me, from the W, Banyan Tree, St Regis, Bvlgari, Anantara, Pan Pacific, Ramada, Alila, Karma, Outrigger all the way down the line to Citadines and more mid-scale condotels (hate that word, but it works) than I can count on all my fingers and toes.

It is interesting to note that Bali investment has experienced a large influx from Jakarta after the financial crises and riots in the capital in the late 1990s. Wealthy industrialists and high-net worth individuals considered the island to be a safe port in the volatile storm of political unrest.

While the 2002 and 2005 bombings each took a serious toll on tourism, room rate growth over the past few years has been one of the regional key success stories. Despite the surge, the ever-present security posts and guard dogs at hotel entrances somehow has not derailed visitors from the West.

More and more luxury hotels continue to enter the pipeline with Westin, Sheraton, Ritz-Carlton and a score of others typify a market on steroids.

The W is a fine example of luxury hospitality on offer in Bali.

There are familiar problems, though: an ailing transportation infrastructure, garbage disposal issues and a growing divide between the haves and have-nots, the latter mostly living in parts of the island that are not highly developed.

Add into this a controversial legislation over buildings located within a five-kilometer radius of the Uluwatu Temple. This zone has hotel and residential projects mired in uncertainty.

There are also restrictions on having buildings set back generally 100 meters from the high tide mark, but the island now experiencing a growing number of cliffside estates and hospitality developments.

And, yes, factor in the struggle over building controls by the island's seven regencies (similar to districts) versus sought-after centralized control by the island's governor. It's potent, topical and sounds oh-so-Phuket. One key trait of the Bali real estate market that's missing in Phuket, though, is the large presence of domestic buyers from the capital who are not only looking for investment but are also end-users in hotel-branded properties.

Despite the airfare between the nation's capital and Bali being similar to Bangkok to Phuket, families still come en masse versus shorter-haul destinations on their home island of Java.

While Bali's international airport upgrade project is similar to that underway in Phuket, the project is being fast-tracked to cope with increased passenger traffic. Rumors of a second airport in the northern part of the island remain just that – rumors.

Talking to agents, viewing projects and visiting hotels highlighted that activity on all fronts is vibrant and optimism is keen. Sales take-up rates for property are currently substantially higher than in Phuket due to a more balanced market mix.

As I sit in what is my favorite new haunt in Southeast Asia, the Poole Associates and AB Concept interior designed W Seminyak, it's hard not to be cast under the spell of the island's allure of life on the fringe of the ring of fire. It is certainly something to wake up to.

Rawai fishermen up in arms over title deeds

PRIME real estate locations are being targeted and inhabitants may soon face eviction because they lack title deeds.

Strict National Reform Committee regulations are being enforced which allow for the reclamation of property that is owned but not officially certified by ownership documents.

Imposing these regulations have forced many people off the land they have been living on for generations. A group of seven landowners in Rawai are concerned their properties are now a focus because they have land in areas that is becoming increasingly valuable.

At a recent seminar, the group said they would soon become tenants on land which their families have lived for more than 200 years, and may be forced to pay people who possess the actual title deeds.

Phanuphong Pramongkij, a fisherman, said a group of people had approached him recently and claimed the rights to his land, demanding that he pay monthly rent or face an eviction lawsuit.

He said those "landlords" also demanded that he sign a lease in addition to paying rent.

"All I know is that it will never be possible for them to own the land on which I have lived since birth. It is possibly because the land that we live on is an ideal plot to build a resort."

Phanuphong and his six neighbors are now fighting eviction suits, using pro bono lawyers.

"We rely on vintage and family photos proving [our families] acquisition of the land before title deeds or land ownership documents were issued," he said.

He added that fishermen or villagers living on tourist islands, and whom had acquired their land under similar conditions, were facing the same problem.

"They have become prisoners on their own land. Those locations are Ban Tukkae in Phuket, on Phi Phi Islands, and on Koh Lipe. Many of them cannot make small catches of fish in coastal areas now designated as government property, or raise chickens or grow vegetables in areas proclaimed as the property of those landlords," he said.

"Of those catching fish or harvesting clams, about 20 to my knowledge, have been arrested and charged with encroaching on state property without permission. Many of them who could not pay bail for temporary release during trial have been detained," he added.

In Patong, a number of people whose homes were swept away by the tsunami in 2004 built makeshift shelters near the beach, only to have the land later designated as government property.

Anurak Rakbanjong, one of the tsunami victims, said he believed it was because the area was a prime location looking out along the beach, which later prompted a local politician to designate it as government property.

Anurak now pays 1,000 baht daily for the privilege of not having to move away, while also having to fight an eviction lawsuit.

"I refuse to leave, I have no place to go. If they want me to leave, they must find me a place," he said.

Quoting his lawyer, Anurak said the local authorities were permitted under certain conditions to designate any area as state property.

"It was done to lease the land for profit making purposes, in favor of some businesspeople."

Savills and CBRE look to Europe

TWO LEADING internationally affiliated real estate brokerage firms in Thailand have started promoting properties based in the United Kingdom and Europe.

This is perhaps as a sign of the times, with foreign demand taking a sustained breather over the past two years.

Savills strategy looks to wealthy Thai and even expat residents searching for opportunities in the UK.

A UK properties showcase is prominently promoted on Savills' website offering a variety of entry points.

CB Richard Ellis (CBRE) Thailand recently inked a deal with a European company, Horizon Investment Management, targeting scalable institutional and high net-worth investor opportunities on the continent.

Perhaps the best adage to use is "fish where the fish are", and currently a strong Thai economy and rattled nerves over last year's civil unrest has seen significant levels of capital flight out of the country.

Only the brave grow the stinky sator bean

THERE'S is a bit of a southern Thai obsession with certain edible plants. Of these, the most remarkable is arguably the sator, or stinky bean.

Open markets quickly run out of this delicacy, despite its relatively high price. But although bunches of the pods hang invitingly from trees all around the island, it's more than one's life is worth to try and steal them.

The other day, a sidecar driver was observed going along Chao Fa Road. Both he and his motorbike with sidecar were clad from head to foot in clumps of sator; they looked as though they were riding, camouflaged, into battle. You couldn't see the bike for the beans.

So what are these sator? They resemble enormous, flat, bean pods, up to 18 inches long, with a waxy, green skin, through which the round bumps of the beans within are clearly visible. Taken out, they look like large broad beans.

The pendant clusters of six or eight pods dangle from huge, fast-growing forest trees, which, in common with most food-bearing trees, are now being cultivated commercially. But their jungle origins remain very clear.

There are basically two varieties of parkia javanica. Sator khow is rounder, nuttier in flavor, and with somewhat twisted pods. It is more sought after than sator dahn which has straighter pods.

The flavor of both is, well, intense. Dahn is so pungent that it is often pickled before being eaten. The taste is much more pervasive before cooking, but adds its characteristic bitter and penetrating flavor to a number of southern Thai dishes.

But beware! Feasting on the beans will assuredly give you bad breath and worse, something hardly surprising considering their smell has been likened to that of methane gas.

I risk indelicacy by saying that ingesting them will give rise to flatulence and strong smelling urine, so don't eat them before going to a bar.

And although they are rich in vitamin A, phosphates and calcium, sator beans are also exceptionally high in purines – the main cause of gout.

The good news for gardeners is that you can grow sator from ripened seeds soaked in warm water. And better still, you can now buy cultivars that will produce beans in three or four years. There is also the bonus of attractive yellow flowers, borne on globular heads.

If you want rapid shade or privacy, the sator is your tree.

But even with the smaller hybrids, you will still need a good-sized garden. You may also have to hire a guard during the growing season.

The only other equally malodorous product of Thailand's trees is the durian, which is famously banned from hotels and aircraft on account of its smell. And ironically, it shares with the sator the accolade of being the most sought after of all Thai fruits.

Another majestic tropical specimen, also a member of the legume family with bean-like pods, is the tamarind. It can often be seen in open-air bars and restaurants around the island, where it is frequently used as a shade tree.

Originally from Africa, it has been a presence in Thai rainforests for many centuries. Nowadays it is widely cultivated in plantations.

The ferny, bright green leaves are attractive, but the tamarind is grown for its roundish brown pods which contain large seeds coated in a sticky layer of sweet-sour flesh.

Used in chutneys, curries, drinks and sometimes candied to make sweets, this acidulous pulp adds a distinctive tang to many dishes in south Thailand.

Why not grow your own tree? It will fruit in as little as three years. Then you can cook your own prawns in tamarind sauce. Delicious, and a true taste of Thailand.

If you have a garden that you would like to be featured on this page, please email: pcampbell45@gmail.com

Tip of the week

Snipping away the unwanted

PRUNING is useful for removing diseased wood, but also has a number of other practical functions.

Employed properly, it can improve the natural shape of shrubs. This is best achieved by thinning, which may require removing spindly growth or by cutting off rogue branches or offshoots that do not fit the plant's preferred shape.

Pruning new growth that threatens to become too leggy will stimulate the lower lateral shoots by inhibiting the production of a hormone called auxin.

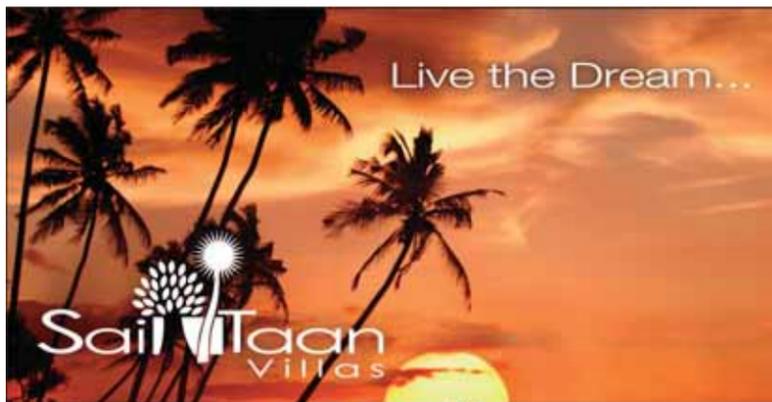

Removing low growth which is often unsightly, will help smaller plants in the vicinity get more space and sun.

Use secateurs when pruning.

In the case of a shrub such as the rose, pruning less robust branches may lead to fewer flowers, but it will almost certainly improve the quality of the blooms that do appear.

As for shearing, trimming and topiary, watch this space...

The Super Squadron

‘We want you! For the future of Phuket sailing’

By Neil Quail

ESTABLISHED in September 2010, the Phuket Youth Sailing Squadron (PYSS) has surpassed all expectations thanks to tireless efforts by its volunteer organizers. The Squadron is now entering a growing number of regattas, and providing incredible sailing opportunities for the youth of Phuket.

Located in Ao Yon and supported by the Phuket Sports Association, the Squadron has its base in one of Phuket's most secure and sheltered bays. This fact was proven recently when inclement weather, which affected nautical traffic around the island, did not upset the PYSS Optimist regatta a fortnight ago.

The Squadron's objectives have been fundamental to their success, and reflect a desire to use sailing as a positive influence for local and underprivileged children. PYSS will soon be registered with the Yacht Racing Association of Thailand (YRAT), which will certainly benefit the children and the club's future fortunes.

Sailing provides a wonderful outlet for the children fortunate enough to have PYSS in their vicinity, with numerous volunteers pooling their experiences to teach youngsters the principles of safety and good-natured competition.

The Squadron is determined to promote and develop the sport on Phuket, something that will certainly benefit Thailand's national sailing scene and maybe even produce future representatives at international levels.

The Squadron's objectives have been fundamental to their success, and reflect a desire to use sailing as a positive influence.

Katy Gooch of PYSS is really pushing the boat out to achieve all these goals. Voicing her ambitions for the club she said:

“We want to see the Squadron grow with more children enjoying sailing and racing and coming into the Optimist

Fleet. As their experience grows, some will continue as coaches for the new team.

“We also need to build a fleet of boats so the sailors who become too old to race the Optimist can continue sailing and develop their skills further. We hope some will become champions and that others will find work in the sailing and yachting industry.”

Katy views the approaching Optimist Nationals as valuable training and a great opportunity for the 10 young sailors to showcase their talents among some 130 boats that will line up for the start.

As with most sports, the skills acquired through sailing can be easily adapted for life and can help children generate a focus in terms of education and career paths.

“Sailing is a great sport and provides the opportunity to develop independence and self-confidence. It also helps them to realize their hidden talents and conquer their fears and doubts, while having fun and making new friends,” Katy said.

Enthusiastic and inspired describes the children of PYSS, several of whom offered opinions on their sailing experiences and hopes for the future.

Sukanya “Ann” Saimarn, 14, attends Koh Sireh School and has been sailing with the Squadron for two and a half years.

“Sailing at PYSS has helped with my discipline, organization and also helped with my spoken English,” said Ann.

“Sailing is great fun and many skills are involved, as you have to understand the sea and wind. I hope to be a champion and compete for Thailand,” she added.

Teerapong “New” Tohkraoak, 13, goes to the same school and has been sailing for just over a year.

“Learning to sail has helped me to be patient and calm. It is challenging and I have gained skills from meeting other good sailors. We have younger children joining the team. I enjoy teaching them new skills,” said New.

However, as with all amateur sports, financial support is the greatest obstacle to the best intentions.

“We need to gain more support from the local community so that we can continue and keep the sailing program going. Naturally there are costs associated with training every weekend, but the main expenditure goes on competing. We have three big competitions coming up that will need support to cover transport, accommodation, food, entry fees, boat transport and charter,” Katy said.

The three competitions referred to are: TOG Optimist Nationals April 29-May 3, Koh Samui Optimist Regatta June 3-5 and the Hua Hin Regatta in August.

The Squadron is open to everyone and all ages, and thrives on an active membership. The club invites interest from individuals who would like to help and support their training program

All financial support is more than welcome and sponsorship packages including corporate, boat, regatta, team and prize options are available.

STAR: Legends of Thailand Manager Piyapong Pue-on

Thai stars 'won't make it easy' for Liverpool

By Neil Quail

TWO of Thailand's footballing heroes are gearing up for their toughest match yet: A clash with a team of Liverpool FC's most prolific former players in a bid to lift the Prime Minister's Cup.

The Legends of Thailand versus the Legends of Liverpool second leg match at Surakul Stadium on June 18 is not to be missed. The first leg will be played in Bangkok three days earlier.

Thai Legends Manager Piyapong Pue-on, 52, and Head Coach Kiatisak "Zico" Senamuang, 37, are national icons, having scored 103 and 77 goals respectively for their country.

Piyapong told the Phuket Gazette, "This is a great opportunity to help a worthy cause and enjoy a great game of football," he said.

The exhibition match will raise funds for the Phuket Youth Football Home (YFH) based in Thalang, with support from the Thai Government and the Ministry of Defence.

"I come from a generation of amateur players so there is a different motivation for us. We played with much more spirit than those in the modern game and that is what people will see when we play against Liverpool," he added.

This is not the first time Kiatisak has played against Liverpool.

"We are really looking forward to the game. But we are not teenagers anymore and will have to be more patient. We still have a few tricks up our sleeves though. We certainly will not make it easy for Liverpool," he said.

Also preparing for the clash of legends will be Surachai Jaturapattarapong, Phairoj Puangjan, Tachatawan Sripan, Amnaj Chalermaoalit and Suthin Chaikitti.

Martin Hill, Head Coach with Brazilian Soccer Schools, which organize the YFH Fair Play League here in Phuket, is delighted with the efforts to raise awareness for YFH.

"Brazilian Soccer Schools Phuket are looking forward to the Legends of Liverpool arriving. It's a chance for the Phuket public and boys of YFH to socialize with true legends of the game," Martin said.

Managing the Legends team will be former Liverpool captain and England defender, Phil Thompson. He is well-versed in management of the "Reds" having been caretaker manager during the 2001-2002 Barclays Premiership season when they finished second - their highest placing to date in the competition.

Irrespective of being a Liverpool supporter, the chance to witness one of the sport's most potent strike partnerships in the form of Robbie Fowler and Steve McManaman should not be missed. And with John Barnes confirmed to play - goal mouth action should be plentiful.

The ever-flamboyant Bruce Grobbelaar will tend the legends net. It may be worth while taking a seat behind the goals to experience the entertainment he will no doubt give fans.

The Great Dane, Jan Molby will monitor the midfield with English born Irish international Jason Macateer and Czech star Patrik Berger, while Gary Gillespie and Don Hutchison will have the double

LEGEND: Robbie Fowler Photo: AFP

European Cup (now UEFA) winner Alan Kennedy to marshal their defense.

The full interview with Piyapong and Kiatisak will be in a forthcoming edition of the Gazette.
